JUDGE PARKER IN TOWN

Makes An Address At Washington College Wednesday Before A Large Audience—Dr. E. L. Barrett Offers Prayer—Singing And Poetry.

The anniversary exercises on Washington's Birthday held at Washington College Wednesday will be recorded as among the most interesting in the history of the town and College. The Hall was filled with a splendid audience.

Miss Louise Russell opened the program with a piano solo followed by prayer by that able and lovable minister, Dr. Louis E. Barrett. Prof. Lawrence C. Woodman, the modest poet, read a most unique and appropriate anniversary poem. Dr. C. P. Gould presented the speaker of the day, Judge Alton Brooks Parker, of New York, who delivered an address full of wisdom and senitillating literary flashes which riveted the attention of his hearers. He confined his remarks to the State papers and life of George Washington. We mention herein his reference to three important questions of today. He begun by saying, "It is always a pleasure to address the youth of this country, for they are this country, its prosperity or its destruction." Then after a resume of the striking events in the life of Washington referred to his Farewell Address as well as other State papers. Said he, "Let us not feel that the words which follow in this most remarkable, indeed unique, State paper can be disregarded on any claim that the times have changed, that our circumstances have altered. Changes in the times, alterations in our circumstances are all foreseen therein, and the warnings of his experiences are offered as specifically applicable thereto.

It has of late been too greatly the practice to excuse departure from the safe guide of past experience—disregard of historic analogy—coupled with adoption of what are termed timely or modern policies, by the assertion that attendant conditions have so greatly varied in the past hundred years or more, by reason of what is known as modern progress, that the wisdom of those who preceded is that the folly of today.

But consider for a moment along what lines this modern progress of ours has proceeded: Have there been any new inventions in ethics? Have the underlying principles of mortality altered? Has logic adopted new rules? Have human beings changed their passions? Have the laws of nature ceased to work? Are not fundamental conditions the same for all times and all peoples? Is not this modern progress of which we speak practically wholly along the line of material matters—appliances for greater comfort, for greater rapidity of intercourse and progress in similar direction—rather than in the line of any change in the eternal principles which sway the destines of man?

Was the luxury which constituted the major peril of the Roman Republic any the less gratifying to the senses than the possibly more refined luxury of today?

"We cannot fail to note how strikingly the strength which we believed would come from Union, has been demonstrated in the century and a quarter succeeding the address of Washington. It finds the United States, at the time of the address so poor and destitute, the richest nation in all the world and fully prepared to take its part as it did including a world war, by defeating the promoter of that war. The outcome of that event found a leadership here, in a search for an organization looking towards the peace of the world—an organization into which all the States of the world entered, excepting Russia, Mexico, Germany and the United States.

Personally, I believed then as I do now, that the United States should have entered the League of Nations. We can point with pride to the fact that our President took in inviting four great nations to come here and confer together. Nor can we fail to rejoice over the outcome which is forming the second step promoted by Presidents of this country looking toward that hoped for day when the differences between nations shall be settled as simply as are those of individuals in civilized countries and too when no nation shall prepare to seize the territory of any nation because if its people so willed, they dare not."

"We do not enjoy all liberty. The enjoyment of all liberty is the cessation of all social organization of every name and nature. It is not for me to say that the liberty we are enjoying is too great or too small. They are what we are entitled to by the common consent of each of us and our fellows. Whatever restrictions of liberty is placed upon us by the Constitution we must accept to avoid the danger of the loss which would follow the destruction of the social fabric. As Washington well says, "The Constitution which at any time exists 'till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people is sacredly an obligation of all."

His character and experience was deeply imbued with a sense of the importance and close relation between religion and morality and we find this thought pervading his addresses. To my mind religion and morality are indispensible to the political prosperity. He denies the possibility of the existence of national prosperity in exclusion of recognition of religious principles and points out that "the mere politician equally with the pious man ought to respect and cherish them." This splendid address colored with the words of Jefferson stating that they were most fit, most apt, most illuminate and a just tribute to the Father of our Country.

A FATAL SLEDDING ACCIDENT IN TOWN

Henry Beck Townshend, The Seven-Year-Old Son Of S. P. Townshend, Esq., Dies As A Result Of An Accident On Eliason's Hill--Ran Against A Brick Wall—Whole Community Sympathizes.

Henry Beck Townshend, the bright and attractive seven-year-old son of Sidney P. Townshend, Esq., and wife, died at the Maryland University Hospital, Baltimore, Wednesday night as the result of an accident which occurred last Friday. He was enjoying the fine coasting on Eliason's Hill, on the avenue, and in one trip down the steep incline ran into the brick wall which spans the ravine, striking his head a severe blow. Although terribly stunned, with real courage, the little fellow responded to the call of school bell and took his accustomed place in class. His teacher, noting his apparent suffering, execused him his apparand sent him to his home in company with his brother, Sterling. His condition grew worse during the following day and on Monday the physician decided that an operation was advisable, and accordingly the lad was hurried to the Baltimore Hospital, where an operation was performe on Monday evening. This disclosed a blood-clot on the brain due to a ruptured blood vessel. His condition did not improve and he passed away Wednesday night. Henry Beck was a particularly bright and attractive little fellow and a favorite with all who knew him. His parents have the deepest sympathy of the entire community.

The body was brought home by train Thursday. The funeral will take place from his late home on the avenue this Saturday at 11 a. m., interment in Chester Cemetery, Rev. C. L. Atwater officiating. The bearers will be Rolph, John Evans, Belt and Milton Townshend.

A REVOLTING CRIME

After a search following the strange disappearance of Clare Stone, eight years old, 3163 Elmora avenue, Baltimore, while on her way to school, police Wednesday were led to her torn and bruised body in a thicket of Duncan woods, bounded by the Baltimore and Ohio tracks and Duncan lane, at the east end of Eager street. Every indication pointed to a criminal assault, during which it is believed the child was clubbed to death. Two pennies placed on the girl's forehead were the only clues left by the slayer.

Examination of the body revealed that the girl had been choked and beaten, and a wound in the head is believed to have been inflicted by a bullet. No signs of a struggle were found in the thicket and the police believe that the murder was committed elsewhere and that the victim's body was later hidden in the woods.
