CHESTERTOWN - JULY 13, 1889.

The Kindergarten School.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—A new feature in our town is a Kindergarten school for small children, taught by Miss Idell Baker, who seems admirably adapted for the work. On Tuesday, June 25th, she held her first exhibition and all present were much gratified. The exercises commenced by Miss Baker playing a march on the piano, and the children, five in number, (one being absent), marching in from an opposite room, singing; next came a welcome song, the little ones bowing and smiling their welcomes to the guests in the prettiest way; then followed an interesting Scripture lesson, most intelligently recited by the five little girls, ranging from five to six years in age. The subject was the "Building of a Right Character;" obedience being the foundation; stone, diamond; color, white; next comes truthfulness; stone, sapphire; color, blue; then justice; stone, topaz; color, yellow. The children quoted many verses from the Bible. After the Scripture lesson there was more singing, followed by an arithmetic lesson, when the sphere, the cube and cylinder were well compared and described. After this each little girl was called upon to select and describe anything she chose, in the room; this was done with a promptness and minuteness difficult for many an older person. The "Hop" song was exceedingly pretty, the little girls tripping around in the most graceful manner. "The Little Waiters," (song), was too, a success, the chinking of cups, saucers and spoons added to the merry voices, and the mopping of the platter with their towels, holding their aprons, bowing and courtesing, made quite a merry scene.

Pretty paper mats, made by the pupils with a weaving needle, were shown. Drawings of squares, triangles, &c., on the Kindergarten slates, also cardboard work, stick-work, consisting of laying a certain number of different colored sticks on the table and subtracting or adding to them, and showing the difference between horizon and perpendicular positions. The primary and secondary colors are also well known to the pupils. In the "Shoe-maker's Song" the children perched themselves on a bench and imitated well the motions of a shoemaker. "The "Butterfly," a pathetic little piece, was recited in concert. "Look Before You Leap," was another recitation. "See the Shining Dewdrops" and "God Sees," were pretty little hymns.

Calisthenics, led by little Anna Smith, was really beautiful, each child keeping perfect time. The exhibition closed with a "Good bye" song, when the little ones marched again into another room to partake of the refreshments offered them by their kind preceptress.

The Kindergarten system differs entirely from that of other schools. Everything is done, as it were, in play, and the children are required to sing and act all they learn; thus early cultivating a knowledge and love of music and an easy, graceful carriage. Although the leanring is both varied and extensive for their ages, yet it is taught in such a manner, as not to tax the smallest child beyond his or her ability. But above all is the excellent moral and religious training in these schools. Miss Baker is fortunate in having bright little pupils, who do full justice to the patient training of their faithful teacher. Miss Baker is now taking a summer course in the New York Kindergarten, and hopes to have a larger school in the fall. The earliest age for receiving pupils being three years. Could more parents have witnessed her exhibition, we are sure that next term her room would have been filled to over flowing.

GUEST.

A COMMON MISTAKE.

See How the Hours Are Marked by Roman Numerals on Your Watch.

"Mark down the figures on the face of your watch," said a Summit street jeweler to a reporter.

1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6—began the reporter as he put pencil to paper.

"No, I mean Roman numeral."

Then this was produced:

I, II, III, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII.

"You are wrong," said the jeweler.

"I guess not," said the reporter.

"Try again," said the jeweler.

"Perhaps I don't know how to count in Roman figures," said the reporter.

"You know well enough, but watch-makers use different ones. Look at your watch."

"Haven't got one."

"Well, look at mine. See the figure which stands for four o'clock."

The reporter looked and was surprised. It was IIII and not IV.

"Are all the clocks and watches that way?" he asked.

"Every one which has Roman figures in its dial."

"Why?"

"Well, I'll tell you the story. It is nothing but a tradition among watch-makers, but the custom has always been preserved. You may or you may not know that the first clock that in any way resembled those now in use was made by Henry Vick, in 1370. He made it for Charles the V of France, who has been called 'The Wise.'

"Now, Charles was wise in a good many ways. He was wise enough to recover from England most of the land which Edward the III had conquered, and he did a good many other things which benefited France. But his early education had been somewhat neglected and he probably would have had trouble in passing a civil service examination in these enlightened ages. Still he had a reputation for wisdom, and thought that it was necessary, in order to keep it up, that he should also be supposed to possess book learning. The latter was a subject he was extremely touchy about.

"So the story runs in this fashion, although I will not vouch for the language, but put it in that of the present day:

"'Yes, the clock works well,' said Charles, 'but,' being anxious to find fault with a thing he did not understand, 'you have got the figures on the dial wrong.'

"'Wherein, your majesty?" asked Vick.

"'That four should be four ones,' said the king.

"'You are wrong, your majesty," said Vick.

"'I am never wrong,' thundred the king. 'Take it away and correct the mistake!' and corrected it was, and from that day to this 4 o'clock on a watch or clock dial has been IIII instead of IV. The tradition has been faithfully followed."—Toledo Blade.

ADVANCING years with their increasing infirmities should forcibly remind us that the earthly house of this tabernacle must soon be dissolved. Happy is the man who, being thus admonished, can look forward with serene and quiet hope to the "building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," as his future home. Old age thus cheered is Heaven begun on earth.

A PROTECTIVE tariff for the farmer may be all right, but when he must derive all his benefits from it by the way of protected manufactures, with free raw materials, he is traveling around a very large circumference to get across a short diameter. Direct protection on vegetables, fruit and wool would give him equality before the law with manufacturers.

S.S.S. FOR THE BLOOD

Our little girl when but three weeks old broke out with eczema. We tried the prescription from several good doctors, but without any special benefit. We tried S. S.
