Letter From Europe.

The belfry, spoken of in my last letter, contains today 49 chimes; an enormous copper cylinder plays one every quarter of an hour. The machinery for playing them is arranged like an organette; it produces the sweetest music, way up in the air, and when on foggy days the whole tower is obscured, this music seems to come out of the clouds. There are several great bells, three of them are in the topmost tower and can be heard at a distance of four miles. Every two years the arrangement of the chimes is changed at a cost of 2,000 francs ($200). We enjoyed the fine view from the historic old belfry, but the ascending and descending were most tiresome, many of the steps being old and worn; the stairway is very dark and one has to guide himself by a banister of rope. There have been many illustrious persons up those stairs, whose names are inscribed inside the bells which hang lowest under which ten persons can stand; the huge clappers are from 5 to 6 feet long. The greatest bell was cast for the church of Notre Dame 1680, and called "Marie." It weighs 12,295 pounds. It was taken from that church in 1802 on the occasion of the peace concluded between France and England; being struck too fast, the vibrations cracked this magnificent work of art. It has not been replaced.

The churches of Bruges are very wonderful. The Cathedral is very fine but Notre Dame is older, dating back to A. D. 880. It contains the tombs of Charles le Temeraire and his daughter Marie of Burgundy, also many beautiful paintings, carved wooden altars and statues; among them the most beautiful is a statue of the Virgin and child by Michael Angelo and a painting of the Flight into Egypt. I have seen most of the famous collection of paintings in the capital cities of Europe, especially those immortal creations by the old masters in Rome. But few appeal to the senses more than this one in old Bruges. The mother and child are going out into the night, the beautiful face of the Mary is bending over the sleeping infant in her arms, while St. Joseph stands behind her holding a small lantern whose light falls directly on them; outside the door, we can see the stars shining and in the shadow stands the mule already for departure, and standing beside it the angel indistinctly perceived, shadowy, poetical but pointing to Egypt.

The old hospital of St. John was built in XIIth century; over the door of entrance is a curious old carving much defaced. There is a fine collection of paintings here by the famous Flemish painter, Hans Memline, who died here.

The chapel of Saint Sang has a curious old superstition, founded in 1150 in honor of St. Basil, by Thiery d'Alsace and his wife Sybille of Anjou. It is called Saint Sang or Holy Blood supposed to have been brought from Jerusalem by a crusader called Count Thierry of Alsace. It has been regarded with great veneration by the people of Bruges for over 700 years; during sieges great care has been taken to conceal it, and when Philip le Bel of France advanced to take the city, a deputation went out to meet him with a flag of truce begging him not to take this relic. He gave a written promise which is preserved in their archives and today if there was any danger of this relic being taken from Bruges there would be a revolution. On Good Friday I saw the bottle exposed to view in the chapel guarded by two policeman armed. I witnessed thousands upon thousands of people pass up to the altar, kneel, kiss this relic and pass out, all in profound silence; old, young, crippled, and altho' I could not enter into their faith, I respected and wondered at their profound piety, for Bruges is a good city, quiet and orderly. Sundays are religiously kept and the people are kind-hearted, sincere and seem to live up to their ideas of righteousness; so very different from any other city in my travels.

Saturday is market day; the grand space opposite the Belfroi is filled with merchants and merchandise of every description is spread upon the ground or in little booths, the most interesting being the basket sellers and venders of wooden shoes, for all the middle and poorer classes in Europe everywhere on the continent wear wooden shoes. In the fish market old women wear a costume of white caps and long black cloaks with long silver ear-rings. The flower market is equally attractive. The sellers of articles extended for a mile along the banks of the canal with everything for sale.

All kinds of beautiful lace is made here, rivalling that of Brussels; there are over five thousand lace makers, and on fine warm days they can be seen at the doors of their houses or outside in the sunshine busily employed with their cushions on their laps and threads and bobbins flying under their fingers.

There is a beautiful lake on the west of the town called "Love Water" where lovers go to drink as it favors their desires. Some call it the Minnewater, or Middle Lake, over which is the bridge called after our Poet Longfellow.

Some years ago the Czar of Russia went all over Bruges in a barge most royally fitted up and then passed on by canal to Ghent.

There is no place I have loved more than this dear old town, nor one which I have left with more regret.

ROSALIE MITCHELL.

Kept Silent Thirty Years.

The death of Mrs. Susan E. Merrifield, which occurred at Americus, Ga., June 3, revives interest in one of the most peculiar cases ever known of a vow of silence made and kept thirty years. In 1860 Mrs. Merrifield, who, it is said, was a little woman of a peculiarly bright and cheerful disposition, was telling her husband of some occurrence, when he requested her in a very surly manner to be silent, adding that the sound of her voice was hateful to him.

It seems that Mr. Merrifield, while a good husband in every other way, was in the habit of venting his displeasure when aroused by outside matters by ill humor with his wife, whose good nature usually passed his testiness by, but on this occasion she replied that as it was hateful to him he should never hear her voice again. And he never did, nor did any other person ever hear it, for in spite of her husband's remorse and remonstrances from friends and relatives, Mrs. Merrifield kept her vow, though she continued to act the part of a good wife and mother, fulfilling every duty scrupulously. She even bore three children to her husband after this vow was taken. When communication was absolutely necessary with those about her she used a slate, but reduced a language of signs to such perfection in governing her household and children that it was but seldom that this slate was resorted to.

It was thought that when her husband died she would resume the use of her speech, but while she sat by his dying bed, devoted and loving to the last, in answer to his supplications that she speak but a word to him, wrote on the slate with all the evidences of grief: "I cannot, I cannot! God forgive and help me. I cannot!"

But whether it was that she found it impossible to break her will and her vow, or that long disuse had affected her organs so that she really could not use them, could not be arrived at, but her family inclined to the latter belief, for it is said that while on her own deathbed she made distinct, but ineffectual efforts to speak to her children, dying with the seal of silence unremoved from her lips.

THERE ARE more than one person willing and anxious to get the city's block of B. and O. stock and more than one syndicate will bid for it if a proper chance is given. This change should not be withheld. The haste and impatience of these who have made one offer for it indicates that it is a desirable speculation or investment, and that it is wanted very badly. A shrewd dealer will see at a glance that competition will help the sale and hence it would be well to let other bids in than the one pending. Let the city get the best price possible for its holding. It should sell and cancel its own debt, but it need not take the first offer that is made.

ONE of the hardest things to learn is that the world is seldom watching us when we are doing good.

One of the coming men who will have grown up to the idea of washing his shoes clean, and will always uphold "THE BLACKING MOTHER USED."

PUBLIC LOCAL LAW.

Commissioners Authorized to Make Bridge Rules and Regulations.

CHAPTER 483.

AN ACT to authorize the County Commissioners of Queen Anne's County and the County Commissioners of Kent County, to make rules and regulations for the use, by the public, of bridges belonging jointly to said counties.

SECTION 1. And be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the County Commissioners of Queen Anne's County and the County Commissioners of Kent County a majority of each board of said Commissioners concurring, shall have full power and authority to make reasonable rules and regulations for the use, by the public, of all bridges which are the joint property of the said counties of Kent and Queen Anne's, and for the protection of said bridges and other property belonging thereto or therewith and to enforce the observance of said rules and regulations thus made, by imposing upon the party violating such rules and regulations any reasonable fine, not exceeding ten dollars, for any violation of said rules and regulations, which fines shall be collected as small debts are now collected, and shall be recovered in the name of the Commissioners of said counties before any Justice of the Peace of either of the said counties in which the party violating such rulei and regulations shall be found; and on failure or refusal to pay any fine imposed under this law, or inability to collect the same by legal process, the party so fined may be committed to the county jail of the county for a period not exceeding ten days, in the sale manner as commitments are made for fines imposed by the Circuit Courts of this State, on conviction for misdemeanors; and the Justice of the Peace shall make this a part of his judgment, and said fines shall be applied to the keeping of said bridges in repair.

SECTION. 2. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8th, 1890.

I am satisfied that Cancer is hereditary in my family. My father died of it, a sister of my mother died of it, and my ovr sister died of it. My feelings may be imagined, then, when the horrible disease made its appearance on my side. It was a malignant Cancer, eating inwardly in such a way that it could not be cut out. Numerous remedies were used for it, but the Cancer grew steadily worse, until it seemed that I was doomed to follow the others of the family. I took Swift's Specific, which, from the first day, forced out the poison, and continued its use until I had taken several bottles, when I found myself well. I know that S. S. S. cured me.
