TEXAS SHOWS THE WAY —A WORD TO SCHOOLS

Texas is a big State. Several of the new republics of Europe could rattle around inside her borders, with room for Maryland to be there and look on.

Texas does some big things. Her example is worth following, in part, at least. Some day she will do even greater things. Every State in the Union can be glad of this, because she belongs to us all.

One of the big things Texas has done lately is to give a 2000 acre site and $1,000,000 for a beginning and an unfettered hand for establishing a college in the southwestern part of the State. The president of this new institution, in outlining future plans, gave several epigrammatic statements of what he thought were the functions and aims of a school of the present day. Some of them were more or less direct to Texas, but other statements related to the educational situation in general. Here are three or four worth passing on to any school and faculty and those directing school affairs:

1. Faculty members should be the kind of men and women that we want our boys and girls to become.

2. Mental traits in the faculty are as easily transmissible as physical diseases.

3. Faculty members should set a high value on scholarship, a higher value upon human ability, and a still higher value upon human character.

4. A school that boasts that one-third of its students fail in any class is no more sensible and human than a doctor who boasts that one-third of his patients die.

5. Self-support on the part of students who need or desire it should be made possible.

6. There is as much botany to be learned from studying cotton as from the study of orchids.

7. The moment standards of admission are used for the purpose of excluding from college those who might otherwise enter and profit from the work therein they become instruments of the merest intellectual snobbery.

WANTS OLD SCHOOL PLAN

The Grand Jury of Talbot County calls attention to several conditions that should be improved. The county has had in force a policy of centralization of schools, operating busses from the rural sections to the towns and closing the country schoolhouses. The jury took exception to this method, and said:

"The discontinuance of the country school, in which so many leading citizens have been tutored, with the attending centralization of authority in the county seats, is fraught with much danger, we believe, to the general good. Our children are so crowded in the selected schools that training of many is necessarily neglected. The individual instruction which our children formerly received in the country school is no longer possible, group instruction now being the rule, with the inevitable instruction affect on the child.

"Then, again, politics too often gets a foothold in such a situation. The Department of Education is now asking for increased appropriations, and it is today spending $125,000 and in the next levy asking for more, which is borne largely by the landowners of our county, who have suffered most by the closing of the country schools We suggest that a nonpartisan committee of three (two men and one woman), other than the present Board of Education) be appointed by the chief judge of this judicial circuit to make a survey of the public-school situation, the public to be given the benefit of this survey, the committee to serve without pay."

The jury also recommended that no more county bond issues for any purpose whatever be made unless previously authorized by a majority of the voters of the county.

Robert J. Dawson was foreman.

An appeal to newspaper publishers to lend their strength and support to enforcement of law and order, especially the enforcement of the prohibition laws, was made before the 40th annual convention of the National Editorial Association in Richmond on Monday by President George W. Marble, Fort Scott, Kansas. Recalling that the association had gone on record at previous conventions "deprecating the widespread tendency on the part of the metropolitan newspaper and more or less influential citizens to join with lawless elements in flouting the prohibition amendment to the constitution," Mr. Marble said:

"There can, of course be no just criticism of sincere efforts by fair means to repeal an objectionable law, but to tolerate the assumption that because a law is unpopular in a community it may be disregarded there is to concede the impotency of the essential principles of our whole system of Government.

"As sacred at those provisions vouch-safing liberty and protecting the rights of property is that provision prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor."

SATAN'S SOLILOQUY.

We are not ignorant of his devices."—Paul.

In these later great days the people
love to cheat
I've sawed off my horns, put shoes on my feet,
Donned a new suit, put on a false
face,
"Incog" I've gained entrance to many a nice place.
My work with that of some churches
I've so cunningly mixed
That the casual observer sees no difference betwixt.
The "lukewarm" professor I count my best man
There's none serves me better in working my plan.
As to the Moralist he thinks he's all
right—
He's making me respectable while I'm holding him tight.
The card players, and dancers, and theatre crowd
I claim as my people, of many I'm proud,
Of course it suits me much better if
to the church they belong,
It gives tone to my business and helps me along.
Concerning these picture-show people as yet I can't say
But I think if they keep going, I'll turn them my way,
In the lodges, clubs and factions, I take special delight,
I shall always watch over them, by day, and by night.
The Christian young people sometimes get in my way
But I think I can beat them if I keep them at play.
Of course, to church joining I give my consent
As long as they don't mention that they need to repent.
Stereotyped worship, I count it all right
For it never as yet has put me to flight.
My! when the churches and Christians fall out
I take a vacation, and feel as if I'd shout
Against "church socials," I've nothing to say
As long as "programs and refreshments" carry the day.
In church parlors and kitchens no danger I see
So I have concluded to "so let it be."
But if the Bible and prayer they per chance should let in I'll do all I can their numbers to thin.
To the many demoninations I do not object.
They keep my people guessing what name will be next.
Some preaching I hear I don't care much about
Since my name, place, and business
they kindly leave out.
Some church singing I hear sounds
operatic to me
But as long as they like it with them
I'll agree.
The pool-halls and alleys I must try and refine
Or some churches and "y's" will leave me behind
Of one thing though I'm proud, with them it's not new
For they certainly from me have taken their "q"
But of these churches and "y's" I can certainly take care
As long as they don't have too much
Bible and prayer.
These inventions of my servants I fear will not stay.
I've succeeded quite nicely, making
marriage a joke,
Which for most any old reason man's law will revoke.
In Sabbath desecration people mind
me quite well
Which in advancing my kingdom doth wonderfully tell
Of drunks, liars. and harlots can't say I am proud,
To help on my business, they speak
most too loud.
With tobacco, snuff and opium I'm mighty well pleased—
By feeding them to people they are easier deceived.
There's one class of people whom I especially hate—
Those who for the Bible and holiness are straight.
But there is One whom I fear, 'gainst whom I now fight—
The Hero of the "Wilderness" who put me to flight.—Exchange.
