Kent News

SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1928

Governor Albert C. Ritchie has appointed A. C. Humphreys, superintendent of schools of Worcester county, to fill out the unexpired term of the late Senator Orlando Harrison, as a member of the Board of Visitors and Governors of Washington College.

In the Fourth of July a Pittsburgh newspaper, the Sun-Telegraph, took a straw vote among the people of that city on the presidency. Men and women in all ranks of life were asked to express their preference by ballot, using voting devices, which the paper had set up for the purpose. A total of 19,599 persons voted, and, notwithstanding the fact that Pittsburg is regarded as a Republican stronghold, Smith, according to the New York Times, had a majority of 3,225 over Hoover. About half of the whole number voting gave a hint of their natural political leanings. One thousand seven hundred and fifty-two said they voted for John W. Davis four years ago, while 7,625 said they voted for Coolidge.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS SHOW FINE RECORDS

According to statements of the six banks, five of which appeared in the Kent News, show increased business. The total resources are $5,556,428.71, deposits exceed $4,854,201.37, while the combined surplus and undivided profits amount to $341,812.75, the largest in the history of banking business in Kent.

There are now "three million dollar banks" in the county.

Another flourishing financial institution is the Kent Building & Loan Company whose last statement, also published in the News, showed assets of $167,620.06.

When it is taken into consideration that not an overabundance of revenue has been received by the farmers from the sale of asparagus, the first spring crop, the loss of revenue from the cattle, and no wheat money has yet been received for deposit, bankers are forced to the conclusion that the constantly increasing receipts from the dairy and poultry business must be responsible for the remarkable showing. There is but little money here from outside, one estimate being $150,000.

All Kent countians are gratified with the healthy financial condition of the county as seen from the total resources of the banks.

CLERGYMAN SPEAKS OUT FOR SMITH

Spurred on by a deep conviction that civil and religious liberty is a Protestant tenet and that Protestantism is responsible for rearing that standard and must therefore stand by it through thick and thin, Dr. Henry A. Bomberger, a Presbyterian clergyman of Philadelphia, is out for Alfred Emanuel Smith for President of the United States, believing Mr. Smith to be a real "democrat" with a small 'd,' and not the partisan, with a capital.

The hour has struck, he maintains, for a decided stand by democrats against plutocrats.

"School Building Proposals"

Sealed Proposals will be received until 10.00 a. m. on TUESDAY, JULY 31st, 1928, for:

1. The construction of a new school building at Galena, Kent county, Maryland.
2. The installation of a heating system in the same.
3. The installation of plumbing and
4. Wiring the building, for the Board of Education of Kent County in accordance with drawings and specifications prepared by Alfred C. Leach, Architect, Baltimore, Md.

Drawings and specifications may be seen at the office of the Board of Education (3rd floor of Chestertown Elementary School) Corner of High and Mill Streets, Chestertown, Maryland, and a copy thereof may be obtained upon a deposit of ten dollars ($10) which will be refunded upon the return of said drawings and specifications.

The successful bidders will be required to furnish sufficient bond with approved security for the construction and completion of the work on which the bid is made. All proposals or bids should be addresesd to the "Board of Education of Kent County Chestertown, Maryland," and the envelope marked "School Bid."

The Board of Education reserves the right to reject any or all proposals or bids.

By Order of Board of Education of Kent County, Maryland.

A KENT COUNTY TURKEY FARM

By O. C. Lightner in the "Turkey World.

A young fellow came into my office some time ago looking for a position. He came from Madison, Wis. In the course of the conversation I asked him why he wanted to change his position. He said he did not like to live in Madison. I commented that Madison, being the seat of the state capitol and the university, was reputed to be an attractive city in which to live.

"That's just it," he replied. "It's a high-brow town and I hate intelligent people."

Well, in that case, Chicago was a suitable place to come. And so when I journeyed to Baker Arecs, on the sunny shores of Maryland, I took occasion to brush up on rhetoric and elongate my vocabulary. I knew there would be need of words of immense magnitude.

There, a few miles out of Chestertown, is the University of Turkey, where one may hob-nob with the intelligentsia of Turkeydom. And the president, professor, dean and instructor at the University of Turkey is a woman.

The longer I live, the more I become convinced of the rising tide of women in the commercial world. I believe they are in every respect the average equal of men in brain-power and intelligence. On many an occasion I have extolled the supremacy and leadership that women have achieved in the turkey industry. (Oh, won't the men mob me at the next International!)

I practice what I preach in this in- have three women editors in our different fields of the publishing business of which I am very proud. One in particular has become a national authority in the field her journal covers.

Resuming my story, here was Mrs. Helen Baker, a New York woman, born and reared in that great metropolis and living there all her life before deciding to take up turkey farming.

There was the urge to do, to accomplish, to create, on the part of that woman, and she started in raising turkeys. Now she is the author of as fine a book as has been written on turkeys and thousands of people visit her farm to see and learn how she does it.

Last year 5,000 people drove to her farm from scores of states and hundreds came on the railroad. She says in one way she likes to have them come because they can pick out their own turkey and take it with them, thus avoiding any possibility of dissatisfaction and resultant grief. The Sunday I arrived I was pleased to meet our subscribers, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Jordan, of Pennsylvania, who had driven down that morning. As soon as they left more came and while we were eating dinner still others drove in. All day more pilgrims coming.

"What will I do?" said Mrs. Baker. It's getting so I simply cannot see everybody."

I told her everbody who gets their business worked up to a certain point had to have a secretary or assistant. She needs one.

During the week there is the turkey work and then at night the correspondence till late hours, and some of the Turkey World readers know what splendid letters she writes. The surroundings are extremely pleasant. The house is 160 years old. The front yard slopes down to Chesapeake Bay where the Bakers can rake up oysters for dinner. Mr. Baker said he has seen thousands of wild ducks on the river in front of his house. There is ten solid acres of pears, all in bloom when I was there, and the turkeys get the run of them for shade. There were half a dozen brooder houses scattered around. All were constructed on the most modern plan and built on skids for moving.

There was also roosts with good protection and runs full of grass, not almost bare as I see so many places.

I noticed the visitors asked Mrs Baker a great many questions and made particular study of her methods and equipment. It is indeed the University of Turkey.

Each year she has aimed to improve her stock. Her toms are good but not unusual; but her hens, in my opinion, are unbeatable by anybody

I know she does not fully realize what she has. She has been raising from 500 to 1000 birds, selling the culls on the market and each year mating the best pens for better breeding stock. She has never shown and therefore has no way of comparison, but she certainly has produced a wonderful quality of turkeys. Mr. Baker is urging her to make this her last year of big production and hereafter raise half as many from the best pen only. I feel reasonably certain that she will show at the next International and I don't think any of you have a chance against her hens. In the sun they look like they were actually gold plated. She has the hens that will get rid of the green sheen that has lately caused many an otherwise perfectly marked bird to lost out. I told her if she would come to the International and pick out a couple of the best toms to mate with her fine hens she would have the best breeders of the country badly worried to beat her. You turkey raisers can look forward to hearing a talk at the next International by the President of the University of Turkey, Mrs. Helen M. Baker.

PRESIDENTIAL TRADITION

After all, this American Democracy of which we hear so much must be pretty effective.

Half a century ago two boys were growing up, in poverty, on opposite sides of the continent.

In Oregon an orphan named Herbert Hoover was helping his uncle in a real estate office and facing, apparently, a lifetime of hard toil and obscurity.

In New York another fatherless lad named Alfred Smith was selling papers to help support his widowed mother. The streets were his school; one would have said that his prospects were among the dimmest.

This fall one of these two—Herbert Hoover or Alfred Smith—will be elected president of the United States The two boys who had to start making their own way while yet in their 'teens have reached the top. One or the other of them will, within a year, occupy the highest place that an American citizen can attain.

Our Democracy, after all, must be a pretty real thing when that can be true.

The rise of the poor boy to the heights—the old story, "From the log cabin to the White House"—is one of the most cherished traditions. It symbolizes the equality of opportunity that we have been taught to prize above everything else. And we are justified in so regarding it.

For it is the faith that justifies our works. It is the outward, visible symbol of an inner, spiritual grace to drop into the old phraseology of the churchmen. It is a sign that however much injustice and inequality we may have in our country, however much poverty and discouragement and frustration may rest upon some segments of our population, the way is still open. Not yet have we solidified into castes. Not yet have we grown old and cautious and calculating. Not yet have we surrendered to the notion of a ruling class, rich and well born.

There are those who see in our growing industrialization, in the ever increasing accumulation of wealth, a sign that this old avenue of opportunity is to end. Yet while we learn more and more on the machine, on the power of finance, on far-flung bigness in business, industry and politics, by the same token individual ability is becoming more highly prized than ever. We need capable men now more than ever before, and we are trying harder than ever to find them. When one arises—a product of poverty and hard work, like Hoover, Smith, Henry Ford, the Fisher brothers—he is heaped with power and honors.

Much remains to be done, of course. But for the present we can be encouraged. The great old tradition is still flourishing. The two nominations of last month prove it.
