Free Clinics Examined More Than 3500

Christmas Seals Helped To Finance 249 Chest Clinics

Thirty-five hundred and six examinations were made at the 249 free chest clinics, which were conducted in the counties this year by the Maryland Tuberculosis Association in co-operation with the State Health Department.

According to the report of the Medical Director of the Association, more than 700 practicing physicians either attended the clinics or referred cases for diagnosis.

Of the 3506 examinations made, 661 were manifest tuberculosis cases. Four hundred and ninety active cases disclosed, and arrangements made for their proper care.

The clinics are rendering a distinct service to the residents of Maryland, who are not able to pay for a consultant's examination. Known cases of tuberculosis, suspects and contacts are examined, when referred by physicians for corroboration of diagnosis, resulting in the recommendation of many early cases for sanatorium treatment.

Since the clinics were established six years ago, more than 15,000 Marylanders have received free examinations.

THIRTY MILLION SEALS FOR MARYLAND

Maryland's allotment of Tuberculosis Christmas Seals this year will number thirty million. The seals will be sent into every section of the state and an opportunity will be afforded everyone to purchase these little messengers of health. Several days before the sale opens, window posters and cards will be displayed throughout the state advising the public of the twenty-second annual seal sale. Large billboards will carry the health message of the seal. Department stores, and industrial plants will assist in giving publicity to the sale by enclosing small stuffers in their December bills

Christmas Seals Support State-Wide Health Work

Health Activities Embrace State

There are few residents in Maryland who have not heard of the "Miracle House" at Claiborne, Md. nor of the State-Wide Chest Clinics which have been conducted in the counties for six years. As important as these activities are, they represent only a part of the health work carried on throughout the year by the Maryland Tuberculosis Association and its county branches. A brief outline of the activities of the Association follows:

THE MIRACLE HOUSE

For undernourished and under weight children of Maryland who have been in contact with tuberculosis and are in need of preventorium care.

For industrial girls and women needing preventorium care.

CHEST CLINICS

Conducted in the counties of Maryland in co-operation with official health agencies, where deserving patients may receive expert examination and diagnosis without charge. Known cases of tuberculosis, suspects and contacts are examined, when referred by physicians for corroboration of diagnosis.

HEALTH EDUCATION

Through the media of the press, motion pictures, booklets, talks, etc., the public is advised that tuberculosis is preventible and curable.

CHILD HEALTH EDUCATION

This department maintains a special advisory service for teachers, where they may obtain material and advice in working out their health projects.

NURSING SERVICE

Public health nursing service is maintained throughout the state, in co-operation with county and state health agencies.

INDUSTRIAL SERVICE

MEDICAL RESEARCH

LEGISLATION

WHY WE DO IT

Why We Look Around To See If Anyone Saw Us Fall.

By Hehran K. Thompson, Ph. D.

When you slipped and fell on the side walk what was the first thing you did? Of course you looked around to see if anyone observed you. Why? Because you were afraid that if anyone saw you he might laugh, and you didn't want to be laughed at. But why should anyone want to laugh at a person in distress? This is an interesting bit of human nature.

You do not laugh at a cripple or a blind man when he falls because the poor fellow is already handicapped. Humble. He makes no pretenses. He does not callenge your sense of importance. There is no satisfaction in seeing him suffer additional humiliation. It would be like hitting a fellow when he's down or when he admits he has had enough. There is no object in continuing the fight when your opponent says he's licked and admits that you are better man.

The case is quite different with a normal person who falls or is otherwise placed in an embarassing position, provided the injury is not serious. Usually your pride is hurt a lot more than your anatomy. When you are sprawled on the ground you advertise to all observers that you are too stupid to stand on your feet as a human being should. And this is not the sort of advertising you would deliberately broadcast. So you pick yourself up as quickly as you can and offer a sigh of relief that none of your acquaintances saw you fall.

Your humiliation is in direct ratio to your dignity. If you happen to be the boss in the office or shop your help will laugh all the longer and louder — at your back perhaps—because you are supposed to be a lot more dignified than any of them. They laugh when you fall because they feel superior to you, at least for the moment. They can hold their sense of importance. It tickles their vanity. They laugh.

The successful comedies in the movies take advantage of this human trait. When anyone is placed in an awkward or embarassing situation it is always some dignitary—the policeman who is kicked and knocked down, the portly society woman whose costly robes are ruined by the careless waiter spilling soup down her neck.

Since most of us take ourselves quite seriously and tote a lot of dignity about, we dislike to be humiliated. We look around to see if anyone saw us, because such an awkward situation calls for a laugh at our expense and we do not care to be laughed at. A laugh is like a boil. The best place to have either is on the other fellow.
