ODD FISH FOUND IN BOHEMIA RIVER

William Hall, of Georgetown, who fishes stake nets in the Bohemia river, a tributary of the Chesapeake, has found many strangers amongst the finny tribe lately.

Last week he brought home a fish about seven inches long, which our fishermen pronounced a "flying fish." A few days later he succeeded in trapping a cod fish which weighed 4½ pounds.

This is the first time that either kind of fish have been caught in these waters.

Mr. Hall surmises that these strange fish have entered the Delaware bay, and in an effort to reach their native clime, have passed thru the open canal which opens into Elk river, near which point his traps are set.

A Glasgow architect has abandoned his profession to become a Scotch comedian on the variety stage. He should be able to draw good houses.

Some Italians who hauled a camel across the Mediterranean in an airplane might be elected to the publicity section of Mussolini's congress.
