MALLON'S DEATH HELD ACCIDENTAL

A coroner's jury Friday gave a verdict of accidental death in the case of Joseph HurleyMallon, son of Joseph Mallon, banker, Philadelphia.

The death occurred at the summer home of Dr. William Clark, at Kentmore, on the Sassafras river. It was believed that Mallon met his death by a fall from a windmill.

David Clark, son of Dr. Clark and Joseph Hayden, guests at the Clark bungalow, testified that on the night of Mallon's death, a number of young folks were present at a crab feast at the home of Dr. Clark.

According to the testimony, members of the party, including young Mallon, drank high balls but no one was under the influence of liquor.

About 3 o'clock in the morning they missed Mallon from the room, and on going outside to look for him, heard groans. They found him lying on the ground under the windmill.

They summoned assistance, and removed Mallon to the office of Dr. H. P. Copeland, in Chestertown, and thence to Easton Hospital. He died before being admitted.

Dr. William S. Schmidt, Philadelphia, who made an X-ray examination at the request of the father, testified that Mallon's skull was fractured, his jaw broken and there were other serious injuries. A tooth was found in his lung.

Asked by State's Attorney Stephen R. Collins whether he believed the injuries could have been caused by a fall from the windmill, he replied in the affirmative.

Thomas Drew, caretaker at the home of Dr. Clark, testified he had seen Mallon climb to the top of the windmill twice before the night of the accident.

The hearing was conducted in the office of Sheriff J. Thomas Hadaway, and was attended by Mrs. Hayden, mother of Joseph Hayden; Dr. and Mrs. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Mallon and Mr. and Mrs. Cooney, parents of Jack Cooney, one of the three held as witnesses.

Others who testified were Jacob Smith, who occupied a bungalow at Kentmore, and who accompanied Clark and Hayden to Easton with the injured man, and Samuel L. Lloyd also of Kentmore.

Republicans Knock

Party In Session In Baltimore Disappoint All Dry Friends By Being Silent On Dry Enforcement—Senator Goldsborough Remains at Home Ill—Crabbe Says People Will Act.

Adopting a non-committal prohibition plank, the Republicans of Maryland Monday in their State Convention in Baltimore devoted virtually their entire State convention to assailing every detail of the administration of Governor Ritchie, only to hear in the closing minutes a rebuke given to their leaders for making this a "knocking" instead of a "boosting" campaign.

Although minor friction in several places were attendant on the meeting nothing happened on the floor of the Maryland Theatre, the convention hall, to dispel the harmony of the party until Dr. Joseph I. France former United States Senator, arose to second the nomination of Dr. Chas. S. Warner, of Belair, for Clerk of the Court of Appeals.

In urging his party and its leader to stop talking about Governor Ritchie and the Democrats and to broadcast the merits of their own candidates. Dr. France struck a note so discordant with all that had gone before that Republican chieftians on the platform whistled under their breaths in amazement.

Nor was it a casual reference that Dr. France made to it. He discussed his contention for several minutes, comparing the political campaign with a merchant who advertises by "knocking" the merits of the commodities his competitors have offered for sale, instead of "boosting" his own.

Broening Revises Dry Plank

The only other flury in the meeting came when it was learned that Mayor Broening, as the convention started, was displeased with the plank on prohibition in the tentative platform drafted by a committee elected by party leaders.

So dissatisfied was the Mayor with the proposed plank that he rewrote virtually all of it, an action which necessitated sending for typists. Having recessed for half hour to permit the resolutions committee to deliberate, the convention was delayed for one hour and a half as a result of the rewriting of the prohibition plank.

The revised plank in finished form did not reach the convention until John A. Robinson, chairman of the resolutions committee, had finished reading all of the remainder of the platform, except one page. Had it been another minute late a pause in the reading would have ensued.

Mayor Broening's changes were in phrasing and not in substance, it was reported.

At the outset, the plank pledges the Republicans to oppose the return of the saloon. Raising of prohibition as an issue by the Democrats was then termed a "screen" for the "shortcomings" of the Ritchie admintratio and to divert attention from the fourth-term issue.

Divergence of opinion on the wisdom of the Eighteenth Amendment is recognized by the plank which added that "we concede to any individual or group of individuals the right to advocate its retention or repeal by all lawful means."

"Unless a public official is himself an exemplar, respect for law and order must suffer," asserted the plank in declaring that here is no question that public officials are required by their oaths "to support and enforce all laws as they may exist."

Pointing out that the Governor of the State, as such, has no voice in the retention or repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, the plank declared that "it is, in fact, a part of the Constitution of the United States and the law of this State."

This last phrase was generally regarded as the most important in the plank and was interpreted as leaving the way open for David A. Robb, Republican candidate for Attorney-General, to state his disagreement with the opinion of Alexander Armstrong, when he was Attorney-General, that the police of Maryland and Baltimore lack jurisdiction to enforce Federal statutes.

The plank completely evaded any reference to a State-wide prohibition enforcement act. Maryland has never had one and the real test of a prohibition stand in State compaigns here has been regarded as advocacy or opposition to such a State-wide act.

The absence of Senator Phillips Lee Goldsborough, the nominal leader of party in Maryland, caused some comment. A letter was read explaining that he had been ill for several weeks and his physicians had advised him to remain in his room for a few days longer. He said he hoped to be of service later in the campaign.

While the resolutions committee was deliberating over the platform George W. Crabbe, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, was in the lobby of the convention hall, greeting and conferring with the delegates. What hand, if any, he had in framing the plank was not revealed.

Asked after the convention what he thought of the prohibition platform, Mr. Crabbe said:

"I think it speaks for itself."

He added that it had not yet been decided whether the league this year would indorse any candidates for State-wide officers, pointing out that all the candidates were well known and that "our people have pretty well made up their minds as to what they will do."

Pussy's Butcher

American visitors to Cheslea, the Latin Quarter of London, are often amused upon seeing a little old man trundling a cart with a sign painted across its front: "Pussy's Butcher." The old man is a well-known figure to Chelseaites and supplies the cheaper cuts of meat ready-cooked for the neighborhood cats.
