A weary Senate Monday ratified the London naval treaty.

The pact was accepted by an overwhelming majority—58 to 9.

The United States thus becomes the first of the five signatory powers to ratify the treaty.

FARMERS FORTUNATE

In spite of low priced wheat and general unsatisfactory conditions in farming, farmers are much more fortunate than they realize. Let us take stock. Let us make a few comparisons—then cheer-up.

The farmer may be down but he is not OUT. It is true he has a reduced income through lowered prices. This is unpleasant, but not necessarily harmful. In fact, it is from times of depresion and need that we learn to adjust and meet conditions and thereby progress.

Let us realize that the general depression effects all. The farmer today is potentially and actually in better position than the city man. The farmer is never out of a job. Think of the millions out of work during the past winter, with thousands of willing workers in breadlines due to lack of work.

The farmer has a rent free home—most of them have fuel for the cutting. The farmer can very largely "live at home," if he will—milk, butter, eggs, poultry, hogs, vegetables, fruits, berries, breadstuffs, etc., all may come from the farm.

If the price level of the things he has to sell are lower than the price level of the things he usually buys, he can solve a part of his problem by consuming at home all he needs and reducing the buying of the non-essentials. Self-preservation is a first law of nature. Remember, "the farmer starves last."

We would not suggest that everything is "rosy" in farming, but we do decidely suggest that the agricultural situation is not nearly so "blue" as it is being so constantly painted. Think of the city people holding on to precarious jobs—afraid to ask for their vacation, through fear of losing their job—their means of livelihood.

No:—farmers are not one-half so badly off as some "uplifters" would have us believe. The more attention is centered on self-pity and the more commiseration is showered on farmers, the worse for them. Let us take stock—count our blessings and settle down to work out our own salvation.

The above was penned after talking with an industrious tenant farmer who estimates that he is $2,000 better off on the farm than the city man.
