What nobler, better ambition can a young couple have than to live loving, helpful lives, and then, in a green old age, look back over a life that has been mutually self-sacrificing, useful and successful? The one great stumbling-block that stands between most married couples and this ideal married career is ill-health. If both husband and wife would take proper care of their health, there would be more hale, hearty and happy old people in the world. If, when a man suffers from the little ills of life, he will resort to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the chances are that he will avoid the big and fatal illnesses. This great medicine gives a man a healthy hunger, facilitates the flow of digestive juices, invigorates the liver, purifies and enriches the blood and builds firm, muscular, healthy flesh tissue.

It is an old saying that women are hard to kill. There is some truth in this, as far as the majority of illnesses are concerned. There is one class of disorders, however, that quickly undermine any woman's general health. No woman can retain her strength who suffers from weakness and disease of the delicate and important organs that make wifehood and motherhood possible. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is an unfailing cure for all disorders of this description. It acts directly on the sensitive organs concerned, in a natural, soothing way. It makes them strong, healthy and vigorous. It prepares them to bear the burdens of maternity. It is the greatest of nerve tonics. The woman who uses it will bear healthy, happy children, and live to a ripe old age.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate the stomach, liver and bowels. By all medicine dealers.

work but a $2500 salary. The one offered all work and no pay, the other little work and much pay. Which would you have accepted? What would I? The $2500?

"The dear delight seems so to be desired, perhaps I might."

But the question is not what you or I have done but what did Miss Willard do? She sat down and wrote to Dr. Van Norman, of New York, declining his offer. She wrote to Mrs. Rounds, of Chicago, accepting the presidency of their Union, and from that day until the 17th day of February last, when, from her apartment in the hotel Empire, New York City, she closed her eyes and silently "crept in beside mother." She never relinquished nor resigned her place. She was called to a W. C. T. U., she was called from the W. C. T. U., mark the contrast!

It is often a question with us preachers if we leave a charge as good as we find it. What was the W. C. T. U. when Miss Willard was called to it what was it when she was called from it? True she is not due all the praise for the marvelous growth, but no one will deny that Francis Willard, more than any other human agency, has made the W. C. T. U what it is. Behold what a monument!

This act, that of choosing her life work, is but an index to her whole life. She literally gave herself to spend and be spent in the work, and died a martyr to the cause. She never regretted her decision. She never swerved one hair's breath from the cause of self-sacrifice. She gave her life for others. She has at least received her crown, but let us not forget that for many, many years she bore a cross. As I read the many telegrams sent after her death, and a description of the rich and elaborate floral offerings, and the addresses given amid flowing tears at her obsequies I thought how pretty, how lovely, how deserved; what a pity she could not see and hear and rejoice, but didn't she? Perhaps so, perhaps not; but this we know: her joy is full, for she has awakened in His likeness.

It was her last Sabbath on earth when in conversation with her physician, Dr. Hills, she said: "Oh how I want our women to have a new concept of religion; the religion of this world is a religion of love, it is a home religion, it is a religion of peace, and tell them, tell them not to forget it, is a religion of patriotism."

Miss Willard had a high and holy concept of religion, hence framed her life to the motto: "For God and Home and Native, then every, land."

Neal Dow and Frances Willard have both fallen but the saloon goes on just the same. No. not the same. The saloon goes on but not as it would if these two heroes had not lived and labored.

A brother of mine who lives in the far west told me some years ago while home on a visit of a battle that once took place between our soldiers and a tribe of indians. The soldiers had fortified themselves in a ranchman's pen, a coral of high stone walls. Their position, like Gibralter was impregnable. The indians, during the battle, would rush up near the wall, fire, then run back. At an early stage of the engagement their chief was slain. The indians seemed determined to remove his body. Witness their self-sacrificing devotion. At each advance two warriors would grab the body of their chief. Instantly the white man's guns bore upon them, and the devoted braves would fall. Nothing daunted, at the next onslaught, two more would lay hold of their chief, drag him a few feet and fall. And so they continued until they had gotten their chief beyond the range of the white man's guns.

In my imagination, and I would to God it was all imagination, I see another conflict.

On the one side is the saloon safely intrenched within the law, on the other side is a little heroic band variously known as cranks, fanatics, fools, patriots, heroes, saints. They fear not the guns of the enemy for they are not afraid to die. But I look and see thousands of happy smiling children about the coral innocently engaged in play. And every volley passes the fort of men, plows deep furrows of death through the ranks of these helpless little ones. What can this little Spartan band do opposed by such a foe? They will do what they can. They will dare to do though they die. They comb their hair and make ready for the fray. They will die if need be but will save as many of these little ones as possible. The word is given to advance. They rush forward, fire, then fall back, but in making their retreat each one gathers up a child or two in his or her arms and runs. The enemies guns play upon them, they are wounded, they fall but thank God the children are saved.

That is the battle of moral suasion, good as far as it goes. But the thing to do is to storm the fort, tear down the walls, rob the saloon of its license. Moral suasion must go hand in hand with legal suasion. While the shade of Frances E. Willard leads on in the moral fight, we of the enfranchised citizens, led on by the spirit of the grand old man from Maine, will, God willing, keep raining away at the legal walls. With our ballots we will demolish the walls of this modern Jerico. And the day is coming when we shall be free from this curse. The saloon must go. The day is dawning, the morning star is shining, we already see the sword of victory in the cloud. If we are but faithful and walk in the footsteps of these two fallen heroes; when of our children who stand at the threshold of the twenty-first century it shall be asked: "Is is lawful to save life or to kill?" In one grand chorus they shall shout in reply: "To save, and only to save."

Important to Mothers.

The manufacturers of Castoria have been compelled to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to familiarize the public with the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. This has been necessitated by reason of pirates counterfeiting the Castoria trade-mark. This counterfeiting is a crime not only against the proprietors of Castoria, but against the growing generation. All persons should be careful to see that Castoria bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher, if they would guard the health of their children. Parents and mothers, in particular, ought to carefully examine the Castoria advertisements which have been appearing in this paper, and to remember that the wrapper of every bottle of genuine Castoria bears the fac-smile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher, under whose supervision it has been manufactured continuously for over thirty years.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

"For five weeks I lived on cold water so to speak," writes a man who suffered terribly from indigestion.

He could hardly keep anything on his stomach. What stayed, wasn't properly digested and gave him terrible pangs.

This is not an uncommon case. Dyspeptics don't get enough nourishment They are generally thin and weak.

They may eat enough, but they don't digest enough. Much of what they eat turns into poison. If this keeps on there's no telling what disease they may get next.

That's why it is best to take Shaker Digestive Cordial, as soon as symptoms of indigestion appear

It cures all the evils of indigestion, and prevents the evils of indigestion causes.

LONG KEEPING BUTTER.

Every Stage In Its Making, From Cow to Cold Storage.

A correspondent of The Country Gentleman has this to say about the making of a kind of butter that will keep a long time without deteriorating in flavor:

Now I want to give the methods of some dairies that are today and have been for more than 25 years, year after year, making and selling for prices from 5 cents to 10 cents above highest quotations.

First of all, they have good, healthy cows that have pure food, pure water and pure air. They are run in pastures that are kept as free as possible from weeds. Their stables are light, roomy and well ventilated. The cows are never worried with either men or dogs. They are fed, milked and handled in all ways with the strictest regularity as to hours and by the same persons, especially as to being milked. The milk is never allowed to stand in stable—or any other place where there might be objectionable odors—until it cools to the temperature of the stable. The milk is strained through wire and cloth strainers into the pans or creamery or separator, whichever method of creaming is used.

Most of those who have successfully made this kind of keeping butter use the gravity process of creaming. Still the method of creaming matters but little, provided you get the right quality of cream and can ripen it to perfection. They skim their milk just as soon as the milk shows the least acidity. The cream is churned in about 48 hours after being taken from the milk. As regards temperature, as much as possible the milk from the gravity process is kept at from 60 degrees to 70 degrees. So also is the cream after being taken from the milk. Generally speaking, the cream from the milk handled in this way is what would be called 40 to 45 per cent cream—that is, 2¼ to 2½ pounds of this cream will make a pound of finished butter. Cream of this quality would necessarily be quite free from other matter than butter fat as compared with cream of which it takes 4 to 4½ pounds for a pound of butter.

The cream is churned at a temperature ranging from 58 degrees to 62 degrees, as the temperature of the air may be at time and place of churning. When the cream begins to show a general form in the churn, especially with the heaviest per cent of cream, some well water of about 60 degrees temperature is put into the churn. As soon as the butter globules form into size like small shot or grains of wheat the buttermilk is run off and the butter is washed with water at not far from 60 degrees temperature. After washing and draining as dry as possible the butter is taken from the churn, weighed and put on butter worker ready to be salted. The quantity of salt runs from 1 to 1¼ ounces per pound of butter, as customers may desire. When the salt is thoroughly worked into the butter, it is rolled into large lump and after being well covered with a linen cloth dampened so as to exclude the air as much as possible, it is left for four or five hours, when it receives another slight working and is packed or stamped into pound prints.

So much for the method of making. Now as to packing, when wanted in large packages, the best package I have ever yet used is a first class well made white oak package. These should be well soaked in brine for several days before being used. The butter is put into these packages in quantities that will make a layer not far from two inches in thickness. When this layer is firmly pressed down in the package, a sprinkling of salt is put on the butter and another layer of butter put on until the package is full. When filled, a piece of muslin is placed over the butter and a layer of salt on top of the muslin. The salt is dampened and well placed against sides of package. Sometimes the salt will need moistening a second time. A smooth stone or piece of plank is laid over the package and it is left in this shape until it is shipped. When a package is opened for use, a muslin sack the size of the package should be made that will hold salt to the quantity of one-half inch thickness. This can be put on top of the butter and kept until the butter is all used out.

To get the butter from the package in good shape a V shaped piece may first be taken from a layer, and then you can cut out any shape or size you like. Great care must be taken at all times when butter is taken from a package to see that the bag of salt is put back in good shape, and you are safe against having tainted butter.

Dairy and Creamery.

In rainy seasons in early summer the grass is watery, consequently the cream is thin and the butter made from it is soft. When this is the case, cool the cream down rapidly and churn it at as low a temperature as you can make the butter come. Having the cream cold when you churn will help the appearance and flavor of the butter.

When the pasture is watery, give the cows considerable additional dry feed. This will in a measure counteract the effect of the grass.

A cheesemaker reports that he presses curd successfully at a temperature as low as 63 degrees, but he would not do so ordinarily when it was colder than 75 degrees.

For shipping butter the 56 pound square package is regarded as the best. For a local trade nothing goes off so well as pound and half pound prints. A one pound print that is divided by a ridge or depression in the print into four equal parts, so that a quarter may be cut off at a time, is very convenient and popular.

When you employ a starter for ripening cream, use from 5 to 8 per cent as much of the starter as you have of cream.

Influence of Love.

Love is a devouring flame of fire against all that is evil. Its influence is reforming, dividing, disturbing, dissolving and revolutionary.—Rev. W. A. Gardner, Christian Church, San Francisco.

The World's Safety.

The safety of the world lies not in dead forms or dogmas, but in good men; not in creed, but in character; not in professionalism, but in actual vital goodness.—Rev. R. T. Johnston, Baptist, St. Louis.

The Young Replace the Old.

The world depends upon quickness, smartness, movement, strength and agility. And these belong to youth and win the victory every time against the seriousness, the slowness and the rigidity of age.—Rev. John Cuckson, Church of the Disciples, Boston.

Good Advice.

When you speak of your neighbor, say something good of him, and when you pray ask God to bless him. Attend divine service whenever possible and you will strengthen your church and your own faith in God.—Dr. R. V. Atkisson, Methodist, Atlanta.

The Future Reward.

As the happiness of age depends upon the discretion and self discipline of truth so if man is to live again we must reasonably believe his future peace will be proportionate to his present faithfulness.—Rev. Charles Edward Locke, Methodist, San Francisco.

Value of True Giving.

True giving is that which costs something, which is measured by sacrifice, which is the child of tears and blood. And, brother man, take to your heart this lesson, that only sacrificial giving can bless the world.—Dr. George H. Combs, Christian Church, Kansas City.
