...armers William Stone and George Deihl left their grassy Kansas acres and the Alliance, for which they had been working heart and soul, to come to this town on a summons from a green goods man, and reached Hoboken about 4 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. There they met an affable gentleman, who, they thought, gave them $650 of his good money for their $150. They spent the night in a police cell for making the exchange, and were arraigned in Yorkville Court, yesterday afternoon, but were discharged becaused there was no evidence upon which to hold them.

Later in the day they started back to Kansas. They had just enough money left to get them to Pennsylvania, where they intend to stop off and go to work in a coal mine for more money in preference to sending home for money and making awkward explanations. They 'carried with them countenances about which hovered a fog of surprise.

It was their first visit East. Stone is 21 years old and hails from Stillson, while Deihl is 29 and lives near Fort Scott. Both men are married. Stone told the following story:

"When the nice feller had gone out another man, a big man, comes up and says, 'Who's bag is this?' I say, 'Don't know.' He says, 'Ain't it yours?' No,' says we. 'Well, you better come down stairs then and well see about it.' he says, and he calls a policemen, and they marches we' uns down into a room where a bell has a fit most of the time, and searches us and the bag. We watched mighty close and expected to see the $650 come tumblin' out. But it didn't. The man opened the bag and found seven packages of bills. I says, 'That's my money.' He turned the top bill down and says, disgusted like, 'Green goods.' George and me was thunderstruck, and don't know yet just what it all was. I says to George that I guessed the other feller was smarter 'n we 'uns, better go along to home."

The big man the farmers spoke of was Detective McArdle of the Grand Central station. He had spotted the green goods men's famous black satchel. The satchel contained seven packages of paper of a greenish color, each topped with a good $1 bill. When the prisoners were arraigned before Justice Ryan in Yorkville no law could be found upon which to hold them, and they were discharged.

Wednesday was altogether a great day among the green goods men. Detectives Hickey aed Crowley late that night came across two well-known operators carrying suspicious bundles. The pair were arrested, and when the packages were opened they were found to contain eighteen loaded revolvers of the largest calibre. The men were doubtless moving the armory of one of the gangs. The prisoners are Thomas O'Brien, alias "Pady the Pig," and George Evans. Besides the pistols they had a list of greenhorns, the names of other members of the gang to whom revolvers had been lent, and some maxims and moral reflections written in a woman's hand on a sheet of paper. O'Brien and Evans boarded a down-town train at Eighth avenue and Fifty-third street. The detectives happened to be riding in the same car.

In the package carried by Paddy the Pig there were eleven revolvers and in Evans' bundle there were seven. O'Brien, it is suspected, is the leader of the gang, and Inspector Byrnes believes that he is the man who was robbed of $1,700 by James Hartley and Robert George, the greenhorns from Alabama. Evans had a roll of greenbacks amounting altogether to $948. The maxims, epigrams, and reflections found on the rascals read thus:

Experience is a trophy composed of all weapens we have been wounded with.

When you steal, steal what amounts to something.

Genius is only entitled to respect when it promotes the peace and improves the happiness of the mind.

In these days honor is almost a lost art.

To be able to deceive is considered the greatest excellence.

To-day there is no consideration but advantage.

The woman who laughs at love is like the apple on the topmost branch of the tree. When she does come down she will fall hard.

NEW YEAR WORDS TO GIRLS.

You are sitting quietly watching the old year as it fades away and the new one as it comes in. You think of all the joys and the sorrows that have come to you during 1890, and of your hopes and ambitions for 1891; you believe just as you did a year ago —that you will make a great resolve that the year shall be better and your life nobler and more useful than it was last year. Now don't do this. Don't make the big resolve. Think, hope and pray what you want to, but in its place, make a lot of little resolves that each one of which will in time tend to make you reach the goal you desire to.

Resolve to think a little less about yourself and a little more of the comforts of others.

Resolve to be less quick of speech and more certain in action than you have been.

Resolve not to let the wicked little demon of envy enter your heart and make you bitter and fault-finding.

Resolve to consider those of your own household; the inclination on the part of too many of us is to reserve our virtues and our graces for those outside, and this and this is all wrong.

My dear girls, you had better blush unseen, as good daughters, than gain all the fame imaginable as bright talkers and beauties without homely talent. I like that word homely—I use it perhaps in a different sense from the one you give it. It means belonging to the home, and as the home is the place where love and charity should abide, so the talents that belong to it are best worth possessing. God bless every one of you and give you some day a home of your own. It may come in the new year. It may be in the years that are far off, but if it never comes just remember that the talent of making a home may be yours, and even though you can only exercise it in a single room you must not bury it and count it of no value.

THE ILLINOIS SENATORSHIP.—The Chicago Herald, which is usually well posted on the political situation, expresses the confident belief that Gen. John M. Palmer will be elected as the successor of United States Senator Farwell, republican. It says that democrats who have carefully canvassed the legislative situation, and who are fully acquainted with the gallant veteran's strength, say he will be elected on the first ballot. Others, however, while they are certain that their favorite will win with ease, think that five or six ballots will be required to end the struggle begun last summer, when the State democratic convention placed General Palmer in the ...goods" letter to Postmaster ...Chestertown, was published in ...ews a short time ago, and no doubt ...e following article on that subject will be of interest to our readers:]

John R. Roley says he did it to avenge a friend who was robbed of $600 by green goods men within the past year. No one has learned the name of this friend for whom Mr. Roley has sacrificed so much time and money, but he has achieved one of those revenges which deserves the name beautiful.

Mr. Roley is a hardware dealer in Lorraine, Illinois, a short, stout little man with a light moustache. A month or so ago he received a letter from a green goods man in New York. It was the usual offer of counterfeit money that could not be told from good money, yet it was to be had at a great discount. This, says Mr. Roley, was just what he had been waiting for. He sat down, took his pen in hand, and wrote a letter which must have made the green goods men laugh when they got it, so eager and so unsophisticated did this new victim seem. He got an answer as soon as the mails could bring it, and then he wrote making an appointment. He said he would be in the Grand Central Station, in New York, on the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 6, and would have a blue muffler about his throat.

At first he was uncertain whether it would be better to go on to New York and try to play the green goods men for their money or to write to inspector Byrnes and get his assistance. At the last moment his heart failed him on the first-named scheme. He thought of the unknown terrors of the metropolis and of the desperate williness of green goods men, and decided that he had better get Inspector Byrnes to help him. So he wrote the Inspector of all that he had done and told him how he would be be dressed, including the blue muffler, and asked him to have a detecctive there to follow him and the green goods men.

Then he packed his grip and started. On Tuesday evening he arrived, and as he stepped from the train his face, emerging from the blue muffler, was white and scared looking. Pretty soon he noticed a man watching him—a young man, well dress and looking like a gentlemanly sort. Mr. Roley, in blue muffler, and the young man eyed each other, chased back and forth several times, and approached each other.

"Mr. Roley?" said the young man.

"Yes, that's my name. Are you Mr. Brown?"

"Yes. I'm glad to see you."

They walked away together and Mr. Roley recovered courage. He felt like a man in a dime novel, for he knew that a sleuth from Inspector Byrnes office was shadowing them. On their way to the Ashland House they talked over the green goods, and Mr. Brown made an appointment for the next morning, when, he said, he would take Roley around and show him the goods. Mr. Roley soon got rid of Brown by telling him he was all tuckered out with the long journey. When Mr. Brown was safely out of the hotel Detective Cowley from the inspector's office went up to Mr. Roley's room and the two arranged the plan of campaign for the morrow.

On Wednesday morning Mr. Brown appeared and started with Mr. Roley for a look at the green goods. He took him to 320 East Eleven street and up to the second story. Mr. Roley had seen no signs of Crowley, and was much alarmed. He went into the room and found two other men sitting there. There were introductions all around, and then Mr. Brown explained the object of his visit. One of the men drew from his pocket a large roll of bills and showed it to Mr. Roley. That gentleman appeared to be highly delighted, and expressed great astonishment that so excellent counterfeits could be made, but when they asked him about buying, Mr. Roley said he had left his draft at the hotel, but that he would return and get it and buy. So he and Brown started out again. As they reached the street door Detectives Crowley and Hickey advanced upon them and put Brown under arrest. One of the detectives then went up stairs to try to get the two other men. But they had gone. He found a man in the hallway and brought him.

In the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday morning Roley failed to identify the other man, and he was released. Brown pleaded not guilty, and was held to answer under $1,000 bonds. As Mr. Roley was anxious to get back to his hardware shop in Lorraine, the papers were sent to the Grand Jury at once, and an indictment was found against George Brown. He was sent to the Tombs in default of $3,500 bail and will be tried on Monday. The detectives hope to get the others before long.

Inspector Byrnes thinks that if countrymen continue to try to beat green goods men at their own game as they have been doing of late the business will be broken up. But, as Hungry Joe used to say, "a sucker is born every hour."

"By gosh, but we did get it socked to us! I'll tell yer how it 'twas. I've been dealin' in hay and had a neighbor workin' with me. We 'uns was approached by a nice-lookin' stranger with a stack of printed letters tellin' we 'uns how ter get money cheap. He was a slick talkin' fellow, and said how't was better'n sellin' hay, specially as this year's crop was durned poor. The neighbor he was took with the scheme and proposed that George and me come on and see what we 'uns could do with his money. Had never heard of the thing before. I'll admit it struck me as bein' jist a leetle mite strange. But George and me rather thought we 'uns could get the best of the other fellers. George and me talked it all over and decided how we 'uns would come East and beat 'em at their own game if it was crooked. So we 'uns started.

"At Easton, in Pennsylvany, we sent a letter by electricity to the feller in Hobuckin, I think it is, tellin' him we 'uns would meet him at a hotel. We got thar and waited a while in the office for the feller to come. He showed we 'uns $650 in good money for $300. We 'uns promised to take it, payin' down $150 now and sendin' the rest when we got back to Kansas. It was the honest like, and when he was not lookin' I winked at George and George winked at me. He put the money in a little black satchel and set it down on the table till he could get his coat on. He took us on to a boat and from both ends and brought us to a depot. Then the air to a railroad built on trestles. We walked we 'uns about two miles, I sh... and left us in the depot. He put ... betwixt George and me while he went and bought our tickets, and then came back. | delo

IT WAS GRAND.

Of Course She Could Act, But She Wore Beautiful Clothes.

"How was the play my dear? Was it good," asked Mr. Greylock the other night after his wife had come home from the theatre, where she had been with some friends. "Good?" cried little Mrs. Greylock, enthusiastcally, "it was just grand, Mortimer! It was a lovely play, and the dresses! In the first act she wore one of the most bewildering beautiful things I ever saw in all my mortal life—a pale apple-green skirt, brocaded in the sweetest shade of pink with a perfectly magnificent train of—"

"Was her acting good?"

"——heavy silver brocade without a particle of trimming on it, but the waist was trimmed all over with something I could not make out, although I strained my eyes trying to all the time she was on the stage. It was an evening dress, and when she first came on she had on——"

"But was she any good as an actress?"

"My dear, please don't interrupt—an opera cloak of soft pink plush, lined with apple green plush, and the loveliest fringe with seed pearls shining in it and——"

"But tell me about her acting."

"Then in the second act she wore the most beautiful bridal costume I ever laid eyes on—a heavy, shining, ivory satin, with the most immense court train, and yards and yards of the loveliest Brussels lace. The whole front of the dress was one mass of tiny flounces of real lace and down the sides there were cascades of the lace and pearl passementerie, while at the back——"

"But the play, my dear, I——"

"And the sleeves of the dress were of lace and they hung clear to the ground, away from the arm, you know. I never saw anything like it before and I can't begin to describe it to you, but it was perfectly——"

"You need not describe any more of it, my dear; I'd rather hear about——"

"Then in the next act she came on in the most exquisite thing—a lovely shade of rose pink silk, made with a sweeping train over a petticoat of Turkish embroidery—oh, that embroidery was too sweet! It was in all sorts of soft, delicate tints and at the bottom there was a rich fringe fully half a yard wide falling over a broad band of pink plush and she wore with the dress a——"

"Come, come, my dear, have done with her gowns and——"

"Yes, yes, I am done with the gowns, but I was going to tell you about her jewels. With the pink dress she wore a perfectly gorgeous diamond necklace, with a huge star pendant, while a glittering crescent shone in her hair and a spray of diamond leaves shone among the lace at her corsage, in her ears she had——"

"I don't care a continental what she had in her ears—don't care much whether she had any ears at all or not. Can she act? That's what I'd like to know.

"Act? Of courage she can act. I never saw a woman more perfectly self-possessed than she was before that great audience. She never sat down or rose awkwardly a single time and I never saw anyone manage a train more gracefully than she managed hers; and in the fourth act her train was so immense.. It was of the heaviest Lyons velvet with a front of netted silk so heavily jetted that it jingled when she walked, and she wore with it the heaviest and loveliest girdle of jet I ever saw, and she'd ostrich tips in her hair and her arms were bare. She'd beautiful arms, too, and——"

"At least tell me what the play was."

"Diamonds on her writes and on a velvet band around her throat, and—on, the play did you ask?"

"Yes, what was the play?"

"Why it was—it was—now let me see —what was the play? Strange, I remember seeing it on the—run down stairs and get my muff, dear, and you'll find a programme in it, I really don't remember what the name of the play was?"—Detroit Free Press.

"LITTLE BO PEEP

had lost her sheep and couldn't tell where to find them." So the old nursery rhyme says, and it goes on to bid her "Leave them alone and they'll come home and bring their tails behind them." All this may be true of lost sheep, but if you have lost your health you cannot afford to leave that alone. It will not come back of its own accord. Some people brag that they never bother about colds. They "let them go the way they came." Alas! too often the victims go—to a consumptive's grave. Until very recently a cure for Consumption, which is universally acknowledged to be scrofula affecting the lungs, would have been looked upon as miraculous, but now people are beginning to realize that the disease is not incurable. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure it if taken in time and given a fair trial. This world-renowned remedy will not make new lungs, but it will restore diseased ones to a healthy state when other means have failed. Thousands gratefully testify to this. It is the most potent tonic, or strength restorer, alterative, or blood-cleanser, and nutritive, or flesh builder known to medical science. For Lingering Coughs, Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, "Liver Complaint" and Dyspepsia or Indigestion, it is an unequaled remedy.

DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY cures the worst cases, no matter of how long standing. 50 cents, by druggists.

VANCE TELLS A GOOD STORY.

An Old Colored Man's Idea of Election and Salvation.

Senator Vance, of North Carolina, unquestionably the champion story-teller of the Senate, writes a New York Tribune correspondent, has a broad stripe of Calvanism down his back, though he is not a communicant in the church. It is told of him that riding along in Buncombe county one day he over took a venerable darkey, with whom he thought to havea "little fun."

"Uncle," said the Governor "are you going to church?"

"No sah, not edzactly—I'm gwine back from church."

"You're a Baptist, I reckon—now, ain't you?"

"No, sah, I ain't no Baptist, do most of the brederen and sisters about here has been under de water."

"Methodist, then?"

"No, sah, I ain't no Mefodis nudder."

"Campbelite?"

"No, sah, I can't errogate to myself de Camelite way of thinkin'."

"Well, what in the name of goodness are you, then?" rejoined the Governor, remembering the narrow range in choice in religions among North Carolina negroes.

"Well, de fac' is, sah, my old marster was a Herruld of the Cross in the Presbyterian Church, and I was fotch up in dat faith."

"What! You don't mean it? Why, that is my church."

The negro making no comment on this announcement, Governor Vance went at him again:

"And do you believe in all of the Presbyterian creed?"

"Yes, sah, dat I does."

"Do you believe in the doctrine of predestination?"

"I dunno dat I recognize de name, sah."

"Why, do you believe that if a man is elected to be saved he will be saved, and that if he is elected to be damned he will be damned?"

"Oh, yes, boss, I believe dat. It's gospel talk, dat is."

"Well, now, take my case. Do you believe that I am elected to be saved?"

The old man struggled for a moment with his desire to be respectful and polite, and then shook his head dubiously.

"Come, now, answer my question," pressed the Governor. "What do you say?"

"Well—I tell you what 'tis, Marse Zeb: Ise been libin' in dis hyah world nigh on sixty years, and I neber yit hyard of any man bein' 'lected 'doubt he was a candidate."
