Tramps at Rock Hall.

Rock Hallites are as considerate and generous as any people on this fair globe to strangers who may be stopping in their midst, but for scalawags, footpads and others, who are clearly a nuisance and a disgrace to their own or any other community, they have no tolerance. On Wednesday night of last week a footpad crme into the village drug store and asked for alcohol with which to bathe his thigh for rheumatism. The clerk, who has a keen eye and who can generally take in the make-up of a man at a glance, said to him, "you don't look like a man suffering from the rheumatism," and that he could not get any alcohol here without a physician's perscription. The tramp then inquired where the doctor was, and the clerk knowing the intent of the fellow, gave him as little satisfaction as to the whereabouts of the doctor as possible, but some one showed him the entrance to doctor's office, and going up he secured the where-with-all that paved the way to secure the coveted drug, returned to the drug store. In the meantime a change of clerks had taken place, in the store. The prescription was handed to the clerk in attendance, who filled it and gave the drug to the tramp, who stated that he had not sufficient money to pay for it, and promising to call in the morning and pay the balance, went out and met his pal, a dutchman, fully a match for himself. Instead of the tramp rubbing his limb, he drank the contents of a four-ounce vial. In a short time he became quite noisy, singing and dancing and performing monkeyisms until the young men of the village concluded there was enough of the tramp racket, and they ordered them to start, but they parleyed, when the young men started them and ran them at a lively gait towards the harbor, turning, they again made for the village, almost exhausted, when the Dutchman sang out, "Bolice, bolice, help, help! mein Gott, vriends, me vas von good vellow; me erts nobody!" For a time the young men relented on account of the poor Dutchman, who was crying like a child, but their relenting soon gave way to a determination to get rid of the tramps. Again they were started down the Grey's Inn road at a more rapid gait than before, and were soon lost sight of. The next morning tramp No. 1 made his appearance at the postoffice, begging for something to tone up with, but he was told he could get nothing until he paid for what he secured the night before, he then inquired for the doctor and went out in search for him. Soon he was going to various persons trying to create sympathy by telling of his treatment at the hands of the village folks, he tried to beg money from those with whom he came in contact, to pay his passage to Baltimore. R.

The Oyster.

From the Saturday Review.

The highly digestible quality of the oyster considered as food was known at a very early period. When Sergius Orata "ennobled the Lucrine oysters," the British variety was unknown to the Romans, but Sallust, at least fifty years B. C., says of the Britons that there is some good in them after all, as they produce an oyster. Sergius had his beds off Baiæ, and made a profit out of them, as they were much in request as a prelude to a banquet, and were esteemed besides for their medicinal virtues. "They nourish wonderfully," we are told, "and solicit rest," being more healing than any drug or mixture that the apothecary can compound. The disgusting habits of the Romans enabled them to swallow in some cases a thousand British oysters at a sitting, but that was when, as Prof. Huxley reminds us, even ladies "carried about with them peacock's feathers and other dainty throat-ticklers for the purpose when they anticipated a more luxurious feed than usual."

Seneca, in the time of Nero, renounced both oysters and mushrooms as mere provocations of appetite, "causing those who are already full to eat more, a thing no doubt very pleasant to gluttons, who like to stuff themselves with such food as very readily slips down and very readily returns." But in times much more remote oysters were in vogue. In Denmark and the northern parts of our island kitchen-middens of the Stone Age yield oyster shells and Professor Forbes affected to pity "the enthusiastic oyster eater, who can hardly gaze upon the abundantly-entombed remains of the apparently well-fed and elegantly-shaped oysters of of our Eocene formation without chasing 'a pearly tear away.'" We cannot believe that oysters ever went out of fashion with our ancestors. "Ostre" occurs in Anglo-Saxon, and seems to be connected with "orst," a knot, a scale. William the Conqueror is said to have esteemed the English oyster very highly, and it figures in the menu of many mediæval feasts, especially in Lent.

He (hopeless, but seeking consoiolation,) —Now, that you have met Tom Walkover, you have no further use for me.

She—Oh, yes, I have. I need you to make him jealous.

The boy who begins in early life to stay out late of nights and smoke cigarettes, even though he does nothing worse, hasn't long to stay. He soon becomes an angel.

So many people are like the fire cracker; they can only make a big splurge and noise in the world at the expense of being hopelessly busted.

To Users of "Fish-Brand" Goods.

The cloth used in our Fish Brand Jackets and Pants has always been of unexcelled strength and durability, but we have just discovered that the mill which has made the cloth for the past ten years has, thro' a mistake, delivered us a small quantity of cloth which is far below our standard. This defect was not known to us until some of the goods had been placed upon the market, and as we intend that the Fish Brand goods shall be the standard for strength, durability and waterproof qualities, we hereby inform all users of these goods that we have authorized every store-keeper handling Fish Brand Oiled Clothing to give at once a new and perfect garment for any that have been torn and are not of the usual strength.

FOUNDED IN 1864 by the present executive—27 YEARS of continuous and successful management—Increased annual attendance—Now occupying four buildings—Stands unrivaled in facilities for educating YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN for success in life. In deciding upon a school for their children, PARENTS should send them to THE BEST, because it pays. It may require the expenditure of a few dollars more at first, but it will prove the cheapest in the end. CHEAP tuition is very dear, because it means cheap teachers, cheap surroundings, inferior facilities, and offers NO opportunities for securing POSITIONS for its pupils and graduates. This Institution, owing to its HIGH standard of excellence, has placed in desirable positions more young men and women from Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, than all similar institutions combined.
