MEETING OF THE PRESIDENT-ELECT AND PRESIDENT HARRISON AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

forty-one years ago. By his special request it was eight years ago put to the same service.

After the delivery of the inaugural address President Cleveland and ex-President Harrison returned to the chamber, repairing at once to Mr. Morton's private room. Here an elaborate buffet lunch was ready and was speedily enjoyed.

The troops, who had been stamping their feet endeavoring to keep warm, formed in line, and at 2.10 o'clock the march to the White House was begun.

At 2.30 o'clock Mrs. Lamont, with a party of friends, and the Misses Stevenson and Misses Bunn, of Bloomington, Ill., drove up to the White House and were received in the Red Room by Mr. and Mrs. McKee. They were followed almost immediately by Mrs. Cleveland, who was greeted in the Blue Room by the recent mistress of the White House, which she then turned over to her who was for four years to preside over its destinies.

At 3 o'clock Mr. Harrison and Mrs. McKee bade the assembled party fare-well and entered their carriage to go to ex-Postmaster-General Wanamaker's for lunch, thence to the station for their departure for Indianapolis. Mr. Harrison was closely followed in his leave-taking by Mr. Morton, who drove away with Senator Teller.

After spending a few minutes in the parlor, President Cleveland, on the arm of Chairman Berret and accompanied by General Schofield and Admiral Gherardi, proceeded to the reviewing stand and took his place there.

THE PARADE.

35,000 Soldiers and Civilians in Line.

The parade lacked the brilliancy of that of eight years ago by reasons of the terrific weather. Nearly all the stands were well filled with the exception of those not covered, which were sparsely occupied. It looked as if every window along the line of march was jammed to overcrowding with men, women and children, gazing interestingly at those less fortunate on the streets, and the military trudging along with a fierce wind, full of cold snow flakes, beating in their faces.

The President's stand was not a well filled as it would have been under other conditions of weather.

On the whole the troops marched well and presented a fine appearance. The regulars, as usual, looked and marched superb, while the cavalry from Fort Meyer never looked better, with their blue and yellow uniforms, waving plumes and glittering, jingling accoutrements. The bands essayed every tune in the repertoire of marches, but by far the most popular air that seemed to catch the crowd all along the line was "Dixie." Curiously enough, the first band to strike up the lively tune was one belonging to the National Guard of Pennsylvania. Spectators were at once seized with the wildest enthusiam and cheered until another band came along pounding and blowing out "The Man That Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo."

The procession was later in reaching the White House than upon any previous inauguration. Not until long after 3 o'clock did the head of the column make its appearance.

The Marylanders Create Enthusiasm All Along the Route.

The splendid appearance of Maryland's National Guard was generally commented upon. At the head of the troops rode Governor Frank Brown, with Adj.-Gen. H. Kyd Douglas and staff in full uniform. All along the avenue the Governor and the Maryland regiments were heartily cheered. Governor Brown was mounted on a handsome chestnut horse and no man in the parade looked better or sat on his horse more gracefully. Complimentary comments of this character were frequently heard. At certain points along the route enthusiastic Marylanders broke through the lines, and rushing to where Governor Brown rode at the head of his troops, shook his hand again and again. At Fifteenth street he was surrounded and enthusiastically greeted.

AT THE BALL.

Ten Thousand Persons Present—Mrs. Cleveland's Costume.

The inaugural ball was a brilliant event. It differed only from Mr. Cleveland's first inaugural ball in numbers.

A rough estimate would place the attendance at the ball at about 10,000. Looking down from the galleries at almost any point there did not seem a square yard of the vast court that was not crowded, and the galleries clear to the very top were lined with people. Under the archways there were many more. The great mass of lookers-on, who did not come with the thought of participating in the moving picture on the floor, watched the scene from these places and felt equally repaid in being of it and not in it.

President Cleveland escorted by General Schofield, and Mrs. Cleveland by Justice Gray, passed up-stairs to their rooms.

A bugle blast and the music of "Hail to the Chief" announced to the multitude that the presidental party was about to descend to the ball-room.

The President and General Schofield walked together and Justice Gray, whose head towered above all others, escorted Mrs. Cleveland. The crowd pressed on so closely behind them that Mrs. Cleveland had to hold up the train of her dress to keep it from being trampled upon. The party made the circuit of the ball-room.

When President and Mrs. Cleveland returned to the gallery a chair was placed for the latter to rest while she viewed the gay scenes on the floor.

The throng in the gallery kept increasing, and the party withdrew to their flower-decked reception-room, and after partaking of some refreshments President and Mrs. Cleveland put on their wraps again and started home to the White House at twenty minutes past ten, having spent nearly two hours at the ball.

Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs Stevenson are totally unlike each other in appearance, yet the gowns they wore that night were almost identical in style, though carried out a little differently in detail. Both wore modifications of the empire dress gowns with the smooth-fitting shape of a princess in the back, with the fullness of the skirt gathered in just below the waist line. In front the drapery hung straight, like the Creek style, from the shoulder.

Mrs. Cleveland's gown was made in New York. The material was pure white satin. The skirt had no trimming. The low-necked waist displayed more of her shoulders than her dresses did when she was mistress of the White House before. Laid smoothly on the satin was a little jacket effect of fine Duchess lace. This jacket had revers of a wide flounce of the lace, and this carried over the shoulders fell over the high-puffed sleeves. Folds of white chiffon were drawn across the corsage in a pointed bertha. The corsage gleamed with diamonds. A string of diamonds made a double loop and several diamond roses and stars divided honors with the big solitaires. In her hair was a diamond tiara, a spray of flowers of three inches long and of graceful height. Mrs. Cleveland wears her hair combed back smoothly from her forehead now. Last night it was twisted in a loose knot just on the crown of her head. Careful observers find other changes in Mrs. Cleveland. In the most important respect she is not changed at all. She is as handsome as ever. Her face, though, is a little thin and pale. Her figure is a little rounded, but not enough to make much change in her general appearance.

Mrs. Stevenson and her bevy of pretty daughters and nieces made an attractive group. Mrs. Stevenson's gown was of white moire. The high puffed sleeves were of purple velvet, and she carried a bunch of hybrid roses half as big as herself.

Miss Stevenson wore pink chiffon embroidered in colors over pink silk; Miss Julia Stevenson, white bengaline, with full puffed elbow sleeves of rainbow satin and pear passementeries. Miss Letitia Stevenson, yet a schoolgirl, wore a Josephine gown of turquoise blue faille and lace.
