Advent Teaching.

And I challenge proof that I do not state their teaching just as it comes from their lips. I have no other object in my KENT NEWS articles. I shall consume no time in replies to what they may say. I would like, however, to just say that where these Adventist apostles are branding as cowards and sneaks those who write over assumed names, they brand as such some of their own most popular authorities. Let us remember, "Elihu on the Sabbath" and what they say in a prefatory note, besides several other tracts they are distributing.

1. They teach a total abstinence from strong drink, tobacco and coffee; and thousands besides themselves believe this to be in the interest of morals, health and economy.

2. They teach the tenthing of income, and this comes to us from Old Testament times with a very strong inferential backing. In a new place they start out to win a male following of fifty whose several annual income is $300, a tenth of which, entire, aggregates $1500, one half of which pays the salary of the pastoral incumbent, while the other half supports some brother who is breaking up the fallow, and whose living must come by appropriation. And no one has any reason to seriously object to this. Many believe a tenth in the Old Testament is synonymous with, "as God hath prospered," in the New.

3. They teach that the soul sleeps in the interim of death and the resurrection. And to prove this have recourse to doubtful inference, or build on scripture of obscure and uncertain meaning. This strange belief originated among certain Arabian and American sects. There are traces of it also in the writings of the Fathers. It was condemned by four great councils; but Pope John xxii, in the 14th century, accepted and openly advocated it. In the period of the reformation it was revived by the Socrenians and Armenians, and fully developed by the Anabaptists, a name given to a very "violent, mystical sect, which, representing the deepest going radicalism, broke away from the general reformatory movement of the sixteenth century, and soon became lost in fanaticism and excess."

4. They teach the utter annihilation of the finally impenitent. And this they support on a very slender thread of inference and obscure scripture. Most of us prefer the old-fashion doctrine of future punishment to annihilation.

5. They teach the second coming of Christ, true, they do not figure it down to the very day, like their Millirite ancestors did; but by astute manipulations of certain prophecies, they put that event within the coming of the next half dozen years. But when that second coming is really at death to the living, why would not the time spent in figuring out His coming be more profitably spent in earnest effort to win the people from the "error of their way?" when a man is ready to face the hour of his dissolation, and meet his record at the judgment, he is ready for the coming of Christ at any moment.

6. They teach that it is impossible to keep the fourth commandment unless we keep Saturday, the seventh day of the week, as our Sabbath. The whole Christian world, but themselves, is wrong on this question. The seventh day, which is a memorial of creation, is greater than the first day, which is a memorial of Christ's resurrection, although it was this event which declared Christ "to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness;" and concerning which the same apostle also writes, He "arose for our justification," and Saturday is the exact seventh day that closed the creation week, and the exact seventh day observed in the wilderness, and has come down through all the fluctuations of the calendar to the present. The deviations of diverse reckonings they find no trouble whatever in straightening out, and Saturday must be kept.

7. And the fourth commandment is broken except work be done the six days before. That requires work on the Christian Sabbath, and work on Sunday lays one liable to civil prosecution; but "Sunday laws of any kind are ungodly relicts of barbarism," and ought to be broken. Sunday is a secular day, but "by refraining from work on Sunday we virtually acknowledge its sanctity and conform to the laws of an opposing religion," says one of their apostles, and that they dare not do. And they therefore keep Saturday and work on Sunday, if they have to do so behind drawn curtains and locked doors. They must work on our Sabbath. Such teaching makes outlaws of hitherto law-abiding citizens, but Adventism is a latter-day revelation, and must be heeded. The day is coming when all will see this new light from above. Everybody but themselves are wrong. The standards of the general Christian church die against them, but these authorities are in darkness, God has made this new revelation to them.

8. And one of their leading preachers has been reported to have openly declared for baptismal regeneration. When one meets the doctrinal conditions of Adventism, and is immersed by an Adventist preacher, set apart to this holy office by an Adventist, his sins are all washed away. And several aver that their own experiences attest that claim, one going so far as to affirm that the moment he came up from his plunge he saw his sins floating away on the tide.

9. And their teaching concerning Sunday legislation is equally reprehensible and dangerous; indeed is Anarchism, pure and simple. They tell us Sunday legislation is religious legislation; and in one their leading tracts, over an assumed name also, they say, "We oppose religious legislation by civil governments, because it is unjust and inconsistant with that civil liberty, which is inalienable and God-given, "because it is" in fact of the every essence of heathenism;" and they call upon every one to unite with them" in warning the people against this monster of injustice, and mystery of iniquity—religious legislation." They say such laws are an unwarranted interference with God's laws, and as such are unconstitutional if all the courts of the nation say otherwise. Only the Seventh-day Adventists, and a few others of their faith and kin, are right on this great question; all others are wrong.

But some of their practices are just as reprehensible as are their teachings. I don't like the way they quote. Let one assert his belief in the finding character of the law of the ten commandments, and at once he is quoted as teaching seventh-day observance, even, if at the same time they know the writer believes that in the proper religious observance of the first day, commonly known as the Lord's Day, we completely meet every requirement of the fourth commandment. Is that honest? And they are just as unfair in quoting scripture. They quote just far enough to prove their case, but not far enough to do the sacred writer justice. They are perfect "jugglers of the scriptures," as an eminent preacher recently said after listening to them a short while.

Then how can they liken themselves at present to the persecuted Methodists of a century ago? Those early Methodist preachers never taught the people to break even bad laws, and were persecuted for righteousness sake only; while these Adventists teach the people to break good laws, and are not persecuted at all, but prosecuted for breaking our laws.

Then how can they have the egregious effronting to pronounce the standards of orthodoxy of no value at all in matters of faith, except those authorities teach their wild and visionary vagaries? They tell the people they care not what our books of comment on the scripture; they go direct to the bible, and are governed entirely by what it says. Can they not see that these great scholars, who have given years of patient study to the sacred text, who are thoroughly informed concerning the original languages, and the history of those early times, are far more competent to tell us what the sacred word means than some one who has enjoyed none of these advantages? As for the claim that God has given them special light on these great questions, this only provokes in the minds of the thoughtful, pity for such ignorance, or disgust for such bragan assumptions. They are "blind leaders of the blind."

And when they teach the people that the blessed old bible is full of grammatical inacuracies and glaring discrepancies, and that its punctuating is wrong even, do they not very well know that such teaching only tends to weaken the faith of the unwary, and those who let others do their delving and thinking, in this blessed book as an inspired record of the will of God to men? Why not tell them why there may be a few mistakes, and that, at the same time, not an essential doctrine is left on an uncertain tenure. "Lax views in inspiration may strip the bible of a great deal of its authority as a divine revelation," and put it down on the level of more human opinion.

And the spirit their leaders manifest toward courts and juries and prosecuting attorneys and legislatures when their teachings are called in question, or their practices molested, is strikingly in contrast with that of the divine Lord whom they claim to copy. They villify and abuse civil rulers and the churches—and everybody who do not give them full license to teach what they please and do as they please. If persecuted for righteousness' sake their spirit would be more Christ-like. Far better would it be "when reviled not to revile again;" but they strike back, and do it with a vengeance. Their spirit is that of the persecutors of the Inquisition days.
