IN GALENA!
Carpets, Carpets!
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION!
A complete city assortment, direct from the leading carpet centre, now on exhibition at our store, including every grade from the least expensive
Ingrains to the Finest Brussels!
We can afford to give you the BEST VALUE for your money, having made arrangements with one of the Largest Philadelphia Carpet Houses to supply us with yard samples of all the new designs and to fill all our orders at prices that enable us to SELL YOU CARPETS AS LOW
as you could buy them at any house in our large cities, thereby saving you all the expenses of going elsewhere for this purpose. We show this immense stock with the aid of Peterson's Patent CARPET EXHIBITOR, so constructed that the effect of a Carpeted Floor Eight Yards Square is produced as each pattern comes into view, the samples revolving on the panorama plan. This enables you to see before purchasing how the carpet will look when matched and fitted to your room, while you can examine and compare qualities as well as from the rolls. As the exhibitor relieves us of the expense of carrying a large stock, saves extra room and labor, interest and insurance on stock, leaves no old unsalable and shopworn goods or remnants on hand to be disposed of before purchasing a new one. We can afford to sell you carpets at HALF THE PROFIT that we otherwise could afford to do. As every carpet is cut and matched before leaving the city you do not lose one inch in matching.

We Offer the Farmers of Kent
TRADE MARK
Our A. A. Bone Superphosphate
AND IMPERIAL COMPOUND FERTILIZERS.
THE A. A.
Is a Positive Animal Bone Fertilizer. It not only makes Wheat, but grows Grass and is an Improver of the soil.
THE IMPERIAL
Is composed chiefly of Dissolved Animal Bone, South Carolina Phosphate Ammonia and Potash. It is an excellent article. Some of our customers really prefer this goods.
WE FIND
That these brands have stood the test with the Highest Grade Fertilizers on the market, and in many instances they have excelled. One gentleman reported a test of 154 sheaves out of plats upon which four different kinds of phosphates were used, two costing more and one less, but the A. A. yielded one bushel more out of the 154 sheaves than either the others, and two bushels more than one of them. Another gentleman reports 1400 bushels off 40 acres, another 438 bushels off 14 acres, and so on, which shows that
THE LIFE
Of the trade in our business surely must be owing to the quality and combination of our goods, for after an unbroken record of 17 successful years, we having sold more goods abroad as well as at home the last year, is a guarantee of genuine merit.
WE HAVE
Certainly bought our stock right for this fall and will be glad to have you correspond or see us concerning before making your purchases.

One Morning in Brussels.

WRITTEN FOR THE KENT NEWS.

Our first idea after breakfasting in Belgium's beautiful capital was to go to the Royal Museum. There are several ways of doing this, but we chose the route that led to the gardens of the King. They are opposite the Royal Palace and are full of interest. We entered them at the lower end and walked up towards the palace. The avenues of old and lofty trees extend in majestic rows, shading the seats and benches on either side and making charming retreats for tired pedestrians, beautiful fountains and exquisite statues are interspersed among the foliage and everything betokens the ancient aristocracy of the place. We were blessed with one of the loveliest days that shines on Brussels, cool and invigorating air, and a joyousness in sight and sound. We took the main avenue and sauntered to the opposite end, where a gate opened directly opposite the Royal Palace where the waving flags announced to his loyal subjects that Leopold, King of the Belgians, was inside alive and well. The palace is plain in architecture and not unlike an ordinary public building. It is not the favorite palace of the Royal family, but they occupy it during a portion of each year.

Just as we emerged from the gardens there was a movement of something unusual among the guards at the palace and immediately the great doors swung open disclosing a view of the inner court, then a light phaeton come out occupied by two ladies, one driving in a careless and easy manner and followed by two footmen in the scarlet livery of the Royal household. The driver was a very pleasant-faced lady very plainly dressed and as the by-standers called on either side, "Vive La Reine Vive Marie Henriette," she bowed to the right and the left in a very unaffected way, while the horses cantered along without check and followed by the galloping outriders.

As soon as the phaeton of the Queen turned the angle of the street, another carriage came through the open doorway of the court. It was mounted with gold and scarlet, drawn by four horses and accompanied by eight postilions, two of which stood on the back of the coach, two galloped ahead, one on each side and two followed on horseback all dressed in the brilliant scarlet and gold uniform. The King received his "Vive Le Roi" very complaisantly and went in an opposite direction from his wife. The heavy gates of the palace closed and we continued our walk to the Royal Museum. A few squares brought us to the royal gallery of art, one of the finest collections of modern art in the country. For it is in this gallery that the great modern Flemish and Dutch masters are represented. They, who are today reflecting some of the genius of Rubens, Rembrandt, Durer, Hobein, VanDyke and a host of others whose pictures are strong, powerful and vivid, full of life and are remarkable even among the marvellous collections at the World's Fair.

They show us the long stretches of Holland marshes, grey and damp, dotted with wind-mills, picturesque women of the lowlands in wooden shoes and national costumes, fish women of Bruges in holiday attire, low ear-rings of pure gold, the heirlooms of generations, great steers and cows browsing on the marshes which have made Van March world renowned, Sad, pathetic peasants whose eyes are full of beseeching tenderness, by Holland's poet painter, Josef Israels. In one of the rooms of the royal gallery we found full length portraits of the King and Queen, whom we had just seen outside. These royal people are not beautiful but are very popular.

Brussels is called the Miniature Paris. It is a very interesting city in every way, giving the impression of solidity and of strength. The streets and buildings are brilliant, everything looks prosperous and during my visit there I saw no indications of poverty or distress.

"ROSALIE MITCHELL."

A Steam Bicycle.

A steam bicycle constructed on novel principles is the invention of Konrad von Meyenburg, a student of the Royal Polytechnic School of Dresden, Saxony, who arrived in New York recently on a vacation trip. He has applied for patents on his bicycle in Germany, England and the United States. In his opinion it will come into general use for long distance riding, as it can be run, he says, an average speed of from 12 to fourteen miles an hour, and the cost of fuel is a trifle. A bicycle fitted with the steam apparatus will weigh about 80 pounds and will cost about $100 more than the ordinary safety machine. The steam is generated in a boiler of galvanized iron, having an asbestos jacket suspended between the wheels. The wet steam is superheated through a long circular tube within the boiler. The steam then passes to the propelling machinery, which is covered by an air and water tight rubber pouch on each side of the rear wheel. Circular crank shafts, directed by side bars on an original principle, give the speed, which can be checked or increased at will. The machinery is controlled as simply and by the same motion of the hand as the ordinary brake. The fuel used is pretroleum or benzine, which is contained in a tank above the forward wheel. Enough can be carried to heat the boiler for three hours. From the tank the oil passes through a tube to a lamp beneath the boiler. The steam supply is practically inexhaustible, as it is returned to the boiler through condensers arranged in rows on each side of the back wheel.

The Colored Voters Revolt.

The Baltimore World of last Saturday has a lenghty article reviewing the action of Chas. T. Westcott, Esq., in making a new Central Committee, &c., from which we make the following extract: "The colored vote of Baltimore will support Latrobe for Mayor, and Mr. Charles T. Westcott has brought about the kick through his recent appointments for the republican city committee. To say that the colored voters are displeased with this committee, does not express it. Among the 22 men named not a single negro appears. The colored men say that this is the first time in the past 20 years the colored voters of Baltimore have been so thoroughly ignored. For this reason they are incensed, and declare their determination to support Latrobe for mayor, even if the republicans should conclude to run anybody in opposition."

RAISED IN AN INCUBATOR.

Here Is a Pretty Young Miss of Five Years Who Passes Her Infancy in One.

Joseph Grevert, the boy who was raised in an incubator, and in whose case the medical profession and the newspaper-reading public took such an interest a few weeks ago, is doing very nicely now at his pretty home, in New York City. Incubator Joe thrived so well in his hot-house home that when he was six weeks old he weighed five and one-half pounds, stood 21 1-2 inches high and had an appalling appetite. There was no one in this whole town who took more interest in little Joe's case than Elsie Raymond, the five-year-old daughter of Ralph R. Raymond, who keeps Playano's old restaurant at No. 136 Third avenue.

Little Elsie holds a unique position in the juvenile world. Not because of anything she has done as yet, although great things are expected of her by her fond parents, nor because of anything she has said, though she has made some very bright speeches in French, Italian and English. This little lady is remarkable because of the unusual circumstances attending her introduction into this world and the manner in which she was nurtured. The experiences of her infancy were even more thrilling and sensational than those of Incubator Joe, who, after all, only spent a few weeks in his glass case.

Elsie's mother fell downstairs just before the little one was born, and when she came into the world it was at first supposed that there was no chance of prolonging her life. Physicians declared that if she were raised to a healthy and fully formed babyhood the case would be unprecedented in medical annals.

This strange baby had no skin on any part of her tiny little body. There were neither finger nor toe nails, and there was only the faintest suspicion of hair on the little head. Her eyes were tightly closed, and an occasional spasmodic movement of the little arms and legs was the sole indication of life. An incubator was procured, and beneath its glass cover the tiny mite of humanity was placed. Little Elsie lived in her glass case for nearly four months.

The most careful watching was necessary all the time. The temperature could not fall below 97 degrees, and it could not go above 102 degrees. The atmospheric pressure within the covering of glass had to be maintained at a certain degree, and so the delicate air-pumps required constant attention. Then, too, this strange baby had to be fed carefully and scientifically. The food was not given through the mouth, for that was impossible; it was poured through a funnel into a tube which passed through an opening in the incubator and finally reached the baby's stomach.

Little Elsie did not cry or even utter a sound during all her life in the glass cage. She did not need to be rocked or carried up and down the length of the room at night. But for all that she exacted even more attention than if she had been a cradle baby.

It was interesting all this while to watch the development of the little lady as she gradually became more like others of her kind. Little by little the skin began to grow. Of course the dermis was there from the start, but the epidermis was not and this gradually appeared and covered the little body. Bit by bit the tiny finger nails and the wee toe nails came out faint and rosy and lovely brown hair, soft and silky, began to cover the little head. The baby did not grow very fast. When Elsie was thirteen days old she weighed 1 pound and 11 ounces.

When she was enough like an ordinary baby to breathe the air that other babies breathe, Elsie was taken from the incubator and laid in a basket, padded with the softest cotton and lined with silk. Then she began to take her food from a tiny spoon through her own mouth, and it was about this time that the little girl found her voice. The first time that she cried her mother, who was convalescing in the next room, burst into tears of joy. It was more than a month after she had bidden good-bye to the incubator and had lived in the open air as other babies lived before little Elsie could be handled as their charges. The new skin and the new finger nails were very tender and very fragile. But by and by the little girl began to grow round and plump, and before a year had passed she gave promise of becoming a sturdy, well developed little girl as she is to-day.

When the fame of little Elsie and her incubator became noised abroad, physicians and medical students crowded the nursery. Letters from scientific people all over the world filled Papa Raymond's mail, until, as he says, life became a burden to him and he had to leave the city for a vacation. Only a few days ago Mr. Raymond received a letter from Prof. Van Volken, of Heidelberg University, inclosing a draft and asking that a picture of the wonderful baby be sent to him. Mr. Raymond sent the picture as requested and returned the draft with it.

The little girl, who is five years old now, is fat and healthy and jolly and round and rosy as she can be. There is nothing about her to indicate what a romantic infancy she had except a little round spot on her head where the hair has never grown. This is supposed to be an indication of a blow received when her mother fell down stairs. She has never been to school. Her mother has taken charge of her early education at home. Elsie speaks French and Italian as well as she does English, and she is very naturally the pride of her parents' hearts and life.

Elsie's father is a well-known man in this town. He has money enough to stop keeping a restaurant whenever he chooses to. He is a member of the Tammany Hall General Committee of his district, and an active man in half a dozen stock companies. He lives at No. 203 East Seventeenth st.

Ten Ways of Doing Good.

There are ten things for which no one has ever been sorry—for doing good to all; for speaking evil of none; for hearing before judging; for thinking before speaking; for holding an angry tongue; for being kind to the distressed; for asking pardon for all wrong; for being patient toward everybody; for stopping the ears to talebearers; for disbelieving ill reports.

THE TIGERS' BULLDOG.

How "Doggy" Trenchard Acquired His Position and Nickname.

New York World.

"Doggy" Trenchard, captain of Princeton's football team, from now until the sun sets behind the hills of Manhattan Field, on Thanksging Day, will be the hope of the Tigers highest college aspirations. Talked of by all, criticised by some, he is the central figure among a thousand of his peers.

The football captaincy is the highest honor that Princeton students can bestow on one of their number. He that wins the honor must be of some genius—for it is not by any means muscle without mind that forces a student into leadership, or that achieves great things for his Alma Mater.

To those who have not been at Princeton it is impossible to convey a full sense of the respect paid by all Princeton men to their football captain. He wields an influence. He speaks and his word becomes law.

For years all the power of the faculty and trustees could not abolish the hideous annual midnight rush between the freshmen and sophmores, but a word from Princeton's football captain last year—an appeal for its discontinuance for the sake of football glory—smashed the rush forever.

The outside public, reading the daily accounts in the newspapers, are apt to think that a football captain's life at Princeton is all sunshine. But as his glory is so is his responsibility. This fact is always before the captain's mind. "Win the championship!" Thats the cry. One day before the great game will find perhaps two or three or more of the men he most confided in with the sprained ankle or bruised arm or a broken nose. Aside from injuries, the physical condition of the men is a matter of deep concern to the captain. This of course, depends on the trainer in a great degree. Amid all these perplexing thoughts he must work out new tricks and hammer in the fine scientific, telling points of the play that win the game.

In every one of these respects Captain Trenchard enjoys the confidence of all Princeton men. He has done well so far as a captain. He has shown himself to be one of the finest end rushers Princeton ever had. But his future fame rests on the results of the next six weeks.

Trenchard was prepared for college at Lawrenceville. There he played end for two years, and under the tutelage of George, the famous Princeton centre of the '89 team, he made a great reputation. His nickname of "Doggy" is far from being a term of reproach. He acquired it at Lawrenceville. How? Because of his increasing determination on the football field. "Doggedness" was the word that expressed the style of the man while playing. The students abbreviated it and the "Doggy" was given him.

Then Trenchard entered Princeton he tried for a place on the scrub team. He distinguished himself on the second eleven, and many thought that his work entitled him to play in the Yale game of 1891. He has played on the Varsity team but one year. This and the fact that at the close of that year he was but a sophomore show what young Trenchard is.

It is against custom and only in cases of rare excellence to elect any but a senior to the football captaincy at Princeton. In all her history she has had but three captains from the junior class. Two of these, Ballard in 1878 and E. A. Poe in 1889, won the championship. They were elected, and they won, because they were bright, muscular fellows. Will Trenchard's apparent genus win the day? Physically, Trenchard is all right. He is low, has broad shoulders, strong arms and powerful calves. Every ounce of his 155 pounds is there for a purpose; solid and tough are his muscles. His face indicates determination. He is a disciplinarian, and can command obedience as well as he can give orders.

Trenchard is the son of Wm. Trenchard, near Chestertown, Md.

Out to Sea on a Float.

George Archer, fisherman and crabber of Port du Peck Island, in the Shrewsbury River, had a peculiar experience a few days ago. Hereafter he will be careful where he drives his horse and also where he goes to sleep.

Archer has been catching a good many crabs lately, and about a week ago he concluded to market them. The crabs were kept in a small float, which was secured to the dock by a rope. Saturday night he drove his horse on the float, and after placing a bunch of salt hay before him proceeded to load the crabs on the wagon. It was late when he finished, so he decided to enter the wagon and take a nap.

He remembered nothing more until he was awakened by the loud neighing of the horse. When he opened his eyes he found that it was daylight. He also discovered at the same time that the waves were breaking over the float, which had broken from its mooring and was drifted out to sea. At times the little craft was completely submerged. The horse kept up an incessant plunging, and the wagon nearly fell off the float several times.

Archer took hasty bearings and found that he was out from Sandy Hook. No help was in sight, and as it was Sunday morning he could not hope for succor. But he lost no time in taking action. He tied his white handkerchief to the end of his whip as a distress signal, and then with the aid of an oar began to work the float landward.

It was almost night when he reached the shore. The ground was rough and he couldn't get the horse ahd wagon off the float. In this predicament he longed for help. It came. A big tug loaded with coal hove in sight. It took the horse and wagon as well as archer, off the float and carried them back to Seabright.
