PARTISANSHIP AND STATESMANSHIP IN CONTRAST.—At one end of Pennsylvania avenue, the other day, we saw Thaddeus Stevens, the partisan leader of radicals and jacobins, tossing the Constitution in the air, proclaiming that the relations between the United States and the Southern States, growing out of the war, were those of conquerors and conquered, and that the will of the conqueror was the measure of right between them. He boldly threw aside all considerations of patriotism and justice, and sinking the legislator in the huckster of political majorities, avowed his rule of action to be so to mould the representatives of the States as to secure majorities in Congress which should effectually exclude democratic influence from the halls of Congress. The country, the true principles of constitutional government, justice, equality, faith between the States, all must give way before the inexorable necessity of perpetuating the power of a faction. At the other end of the Avenue, the President of the United States, acting for the whole people in the name of the Constitution, at the same time directed to the Provisional Governor of Alabama a message announcing that the time had arrived when, in the President's judgment, the affairs of the State of Alabama may safely be committed to the constitutional authorities thereof. The bane and the antidote go thus together. Mad legislators are endeavoring to destroy; the Executive is endeavoring to rebuild and restore. With the first go the fears of corrupt politicians, interested factionists, the fermenters of domestic disease—the real enemies of the Union. With the other are the prayers, the hopes, the encouragement of all who love their country and respect its Constitution.

TRIAL FOR TREASON.—The first treason case, consequent upon the late rebellion, is now being tried in the United States District Court of Tennessee, before Judge Trigg. The case is the United States vs. John S. Gamble, who was an enrolling officer under the Confederate Government, in Blount county, East Tennessee. This is the first treason trial since the memorable Aaron Burr case.

The accused has been acquitted.

A CASE OF CONSCIENCE.—The Secretary of the Treasury, on Monday, received $60, accompanied by the following note:

"Place the inclosed $60 to the credit of the government. It is from a person who believes that God will punish in another world those who keep that which does not belong to them."
