POULTRY

ITEMS OF INTEREST TO THOSE OF OUR READERS WHO ARE INDULGING IN THE ALLURING "GAME" OF POULTRY RAISING

The interest in the raising of poultry has reached a high point in Kent this year, with the peak not yet in sight. It will be many years before the high tide is reached. Many of our readers have been successful and imagine they can see great things for their future in the business; others have tasted the bitter draught of failure. Perhaps the great majority, however, have been what should be rightly termed "fairly successful," losing a great many young ones, rearing a great many fair and some mighty fine ones. These mighty fine ones are the aim of us all, and it is this striving after success that keeps us keyed up to the highest and biggest endeavors. The better we are fixed for rearing chickens, the more of these fine birds we are bound to raise. The equipment, the knowledge of the business and the care which we give the young birds are all big factors in the rearing of the young. But perhaps the most important single thing in the whole business of rearing the young is the feed. They must be fed right. We have made and will continue to make considerable investigations regarding the feeding of the young and before another year rolls around we will likely have some information along this line that will be of interest to our readers. In the meantime, suffice us to say that we have had some mighty good luck in raising chicks this year on commercial mashes and have raised perhaps the best birds we have ever reared in our ten years of experience at the Bramble Poultry Farm. However, we believe that there is room yet for imporvement in all the well-known chick feeds, as good as some of them are, and that time will show the manufacturers this and that improvements will be made.

Broilers are now bringing a big price and our advice to our readers is to put on the market every broiler they have around a pound and a half. If you hold them a week or two the market is sure to decline as fast as the chickens increase in weight, with the result that a chicken a month from now will not bring any more than a chicken of the size mentioned would now. And, then, also, you must consider the fact that when you remove a hundred or so broilers from a flock the pullets and smaller chickens left are bound to improve considerably both in weight and in strength. One thing we are sure of: It is does not pay to hold chickens until late in the spring or summer. It is, we know, some little trouble to cull out the ones that are heavy enough to market, but it pays. Bear in mind this, however, keep your best for breeders next year.

Up to this time there have been shipped from the Chestertown postoffice 200,000 baby chicks, the postage upon which amounts to more than $425. This is the largest yearly shipment in the history of the office.

Shakespeare once remarked that "the apparel oft proclaims the man." How much more it is true that the covering of a fowl bespeaks its merit, for, unlike the man, it cannot seek expression in the selection of its clothes, rather its covering proceeds from the actual construction of that body to which it gives outward expression. If the body is weak, poorly nourished, under developed, the plumage will be short, or it will not lay smooth and sleek, or white tips and purple bars will show in it. Bunyan must have known something about the plumage of a fowl when he wrote the immortale tale of "Pilgrim's Progress," when he said: "They'll be fine feathers that make a fine bird." There is no doubt about it, in nine cases out of every ten, fine feathers do make fine birds. Fine feathers are an externalization of a harmonious and pefectly running organism. Beauty without usefulness is a delusion. Nature never stops merely with beauty. As we look about in the fields, the woods, the blue dome above us, we perceive also that nature does not stop merely at usefulness. It appears that she has never considered her work complete until she has carried the practical to some final outcome of beauty.

In culling out your young cockerels to send to the market we want to impress upon you the most important thing. Save the best for breeders next year and eliminate the trouble of casting here and there for cockerels next year. The natural thing to do, we have found, is to grab and send to market every thing that comes to hand, but this, we have found, is not practical. Catch all the best birds and put them in coops. Then sort them out carefully, ringing the very best for next year. You will save money and trouble by doing this.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Walbert, residing near Fairlee, had the misfortune recently to have their brooder house catch fire from their oil brooder. Not only his brooder house but his entire flock of chicks also went up in flames. It seems that litter became crowded too near the stove and ignited.

Professor Harry Rickey, formerly of Chestertown, for many years poultry expert at the Maryland University, is giving the readers of the "Wicomico News," of Salisbury, some interesting and highly instructive information on the raising of chickens. Mr. Rickey is doing a most useful work by giving the poultrymen of that section the benefit of his wide experience. He knows the poultry business and we read his poultrc notes in the "Wicomico News" each week with great interest. We understand his poultry and feed store at Salisbury is a big success.

Very few of the chicks that die from bowel trouble have white diarrhoea. A great many of our poultrymen think that with the first appearance of bowel trouble that they have white diarrhoea. This, however, is not the case. Every ailment to which the chick is susceptible will bring on bowel trouble, including draughts, improper feed, brooder pneumonia, improper heat, etc. White diarrhoea wipes out the flock in a few days, while bowel troubles appear in almost every flock of any size and continue to take a toll until the chicks are nearly feathered.

Rosebugs, the greatest pest to the chicken and poultry raisers of Kent County, perhaps, have appeared. The only way we can combat them is to keep up the chicks until they have disappeared, although some state that the spraying of arsenate of lead on the surrounding shrubbery will kill them. It only takes a few of these creatures to kill the chicks and it seems that the best ones find them. Strange to say, they don't seem to hurt the hens at all, but are death to the growing stock.

A new chicken pest has appeared in Connecticut to the chicken raisers in the shape of flying rats, according to an exchange. The next thing we expect to hear of will be the ground simply opening, swallowing up the chickens, plant and all of some one, then quietly closing again.

James Eashum, of near Roxana, Del., has a turkey hen which laid 32 eggs before she became broody. All the time she was setting she continued to lay and has continued to lay while carrying her brood. She struts about the farm most of the day with her little one, but leaves them long enough to lay.—Exchange from Delaware.

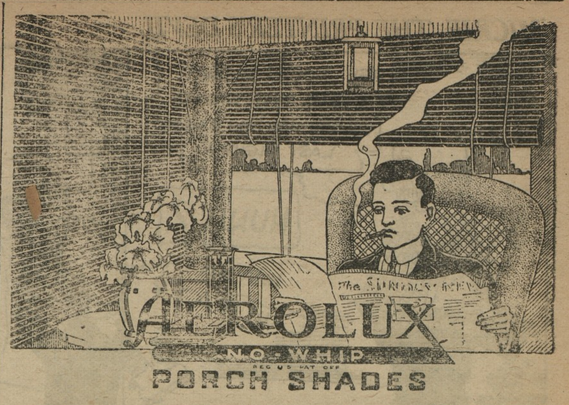
Rev. O. H. Connelly, pastor of Asbury M. E. Church, and also Chaplain of Chester Lodge No. 115 A. F. & A. M., of Chestertown, delivered to the lodge a magnificent sermon last Sunday morning, from the text found in I Corinthians, 3:10-16, read from the old bible used by the Eureka Masonic Lodge No. 78, of Millington, of which Mr. Joseph Mallalieu was a member, the subject being: "Every Man a Builder." A large number was present to greet the order and special music was purnished for the occasion by the choir. There were 83 Master Masons, who attended the services and immediately after close of the church service, Chester lodge with its members and all visiting, were invited to Central Hotel for luncheon. Prof. A. J. Bolin delivered the address of welcome and Mr. William A. Wheatley the response. Seemingly every Mason was entirely pleased with the service and also the reception and dinner served by Mrs. Fletcher Pratt. The local members of the order cordially invite their fraternal brethren to visit them again at a service like this and hope they will make it soon. Mr. Joseph Mallalieu is the proud possessor of some old relics of the old Eureka Lodge A. F. & A. M., and found great pleasure in showing these to a few of the visiting brethern on Sunday after luncheon. At least, some of the visiting members, think it a goodthing for Masons to get together now and then for worship and social intercourse, as it makes them think more and more of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, the foundation stones of good living All were glad they paid the visit and went away with new inspiration and new hopes. "How blessed it is for brethren to dwell together in Unity," and thereby find a common level upon which to work out our destiny, was a remark made by one of the visiting brethern to one of our town's Masons.

Mr. Charles Moore and Misses Beatrice and Cecilia Hollins, of Baltimore, were guests last Sunday of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John G. Moore.



An AEROLUX Haven of Comfort

A sizzling, blistering summer's day—pedestrians passing with wilted collars and torrid dispositions—the folks next door chasing the elusive, shady portion of their open porch—and you as cool as the proverbial cucumber behind your AEROLUX Shades.

Are you missing it! Is your porch too hot for rest—too public for comfort? AEROLUX will convert it into the coolest, airiest, most comfortable room in the home.

On such a porch mother can relax from the cares of a summer household. Baby is always ready for the refreshing daily nap—no need to coax, for the porch is airy and secluded. It's an ideal place for sister to entertain. And dad—it's his favorite location! He claims the most comfortable corner the very first day—and is secluded enough so that he can slip off his shoes without being arrested.
