Crop Reports For Penisula

Major fruit crops promise to be short in Maryland and Delaware this year, following even shorter crops last year when crop failures resulted, according to a statement given the press by John S. Dennee, Agricultural Statistician, for the United States Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates cooperating with the extension service of the University of Maryland. Frosts and freezes over large areas in both states late in April cut short the bumper prospects, say the growers, but even yet the full extent of the damage cannot be determind until after the June drop.

About 1,265,000 bushels of apples is the prospect in Maryland, against 225,000 last season and 1,866,000 bushels, the average of production for the last five years. A commercial crop of about 211,000 barrels is expected, says the Statist.

The apple prospect in Delaware is relatively better. A crop of about 559,000 bushels is forecasted, against 68,000 last year, and 561,000 bushels, the average for the past five years. A commercial crop of 130,000 barrels is thought likely.

The peach prospect is woefully short in both states. About 42 per cent of a full crop in Maryland and 70 in Delaware.

WHAT LUCK TODAY?

"What luck today?" said a man to me
As I returned from the deep blue sea.
"Why, I caught no fish," said I to him.
"But I saw the sun on the ocean's rim.
Like a ball of fire it rose on high,
Then I heard the west wind gently sigh.
And it whispered too of days now past,
And I saw the running tide flow fast,
The mur'ming tide that said to me,
'I come and go as I will—I'm free,'
Then the ships I saw—they tossed and rolled,
And I dreamed a dream of a pirate's gold,
Of the lazy South, and a tropic strand,
Where the mirage gleams o'er the silver sand,
Saw a myriad gulls with their angel wings,
Saw the ducks o'er head in waving strings,
Heard the vagrant wind now soft, now sharp,
Play in the shrouds like a far-off harp,
Saw the rolling waves now topped with green,
Now gently break with a silver sheen,
The snap of the flags—the hiss of the foam,
Saw ships that over the Seven Seas roam,
Saw the wreck of a ship, of days long past,
The sport of the sea, with a broken mast,
With the wash of the waves hear her boilers groan—
I thought I could hear her skipper's moan.
But the storm is past and the azure sky
Is flecked with feathery clouds on high.
I saw all this, my friend, and say,
I think I had very good luck today."
