THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND FINANCE A SUCCESS.

The Department of Commerce and Finance, though begun only last September, has already made itself one of the most attractive features of Washington College. This department is founded on the idea that it is high time for colleges to abandon the old system of education in some measure and to make themselves fit more closely into the life of the present day. A large majority of college graduates now go into business, and it seems ridiculous to give these men the same courses that were offered years ago when every graduate expected to enter a profession.

The Department of Commerce and Finance is now offering work of both preparatory and college grades. In the Preparatory Department are courses in typewriting, shorthand, bookkeeping, business English, and commercial arithmetic. This work is similar to that offered in the various business colleges, but it is done under better conditions and with greater care. Students who contemplate entering a business college would do well to look over these courses and see how they can get better work at lower cost and in more pleasant surroundings. Those who are not candidates for degrees are permitted to take all commercial subjects, but all students are strongly advised to take a broader course. It is dangerous to become too narrow in one's point of view, and narrowness is not an asset in business.

The college courses include such courses as Accounting, Commercial Law, Business Administration, Salesmanship, Advertising, Auditing, etc. These courses are of distinctly college grade, and are based on similar courses offered in the commercial schools of the large universities such as the commercial department of the University of Chicago, the Wharton School of Finance, etc. This is a work that few colleges are attempting to do. It should prove exceptionally valuable not only to those who take the courses but also to the community in general, for it is beyond question that within a few years the business life of the Eastern Shore will show favorable effects from the influx of well trained men from this college.

One plan that the department has laid out for the future is to study business needs and conditions on the Eastern Shore and to develop the work so as to be of the greatest possible value in the conditions as found. This is a baffling piece of constructive work, and it will require time to produce tangible results, but some progress has already been made. It is hoped that in time courses can be developed which will bear directly on Eastern Shore business problems. Already the department is attempting to show the Eastern Shore application of many general principles.

One change is to occur in the personnel of the commercial department next year. Miss Amy Hickman, who has heretofore been supervising the typewriting periods, is to take the position of secretary to the president. Her place is to be filled by Mr. Milton B. Styer. Mr. Styer is a graduate of Banks Business College, of Philadelphia, and he will take charge of shorthand, typewriting, and possibly commercial arithmetic. This will leave Professor Harrington free to devote more time to the collegiate work.

Students of the Eastern Shore of Maryland have in this department an opportunity such as is open to the young men and women of few other communities.

THE WORK FOR WOMEN.

Co-education has long since been tried out, and has everywhere proved itself more natural and efficient than the separate education of the sexes. It is at present an all but universal system. Yet the opening of a dormitory for women last September was an altogether new thing at Washington College. Some years ago there was a dormitory for women, but it was then mainly for students in the normal school. The building was even called Normal Hall. Now, however, the dormitory is exclusively for college students, and its name has been changed to Reid Hall.

Next year the work for women is to be considerably expanded. A department of Domestic Science is to be opened. Miss Cecil Ramsay, of South Carolina, has been chosen as the head of this department and Dean of Women. Miss Ramsay received her A.B. degree from Brenan College, where she specialized in Domestic Science. She took special work in Household Arts at Teachers College, Columbia University, and received the M. A. degree. She was an assistant in Home Economics in Brenan College, was for five years head of the Department of Household Arts in Greenville Woman's College, and was one year head of the same department at Henderson-Brown College, Arkansas. In her college positions Miss Ramsay has also had experience in the work of Dean of Women. Under such experienced direction it is assured that the new department here will be a great success.

Reid Hall is to be repaired and painted during the present summer, and some new furnishings are to be put in. It is a very comfortable dormitory.

The combinations of courses that can be had here should make this an unusually attractive school for women. The Departments of Education, Domestic Science, and Commerce and Finance in addition to the other college work make it possible for a young woman to train here for most of the walks of life that women usually pursue. Especially is this combination strong for one who expects to teach. It is possible here for a student to prepare to teach any work offered in the high schools except manual training. The work is recognized by the State, and the high school teacher's certificate is given to graduates without further examination.

—Mr. Julian Gale, of Queen Anne's, near town, has purchased of Mrs. Annie Mueller her store property on the corner of Church Street and Court street and will take possession on August 11. Mrs. Mueller and daughter will return to Germany for a visit of a few months and will then probably come back to this country, where she is a naturalized citizen. Mrs. Mueller has made a great many warm friends in this town, where she has resided for many years.

—Hundreds of athletes are training for the Delaware State Championship Meet, which will be one of the big features of the opening day of the Delaware State Fair at Elsmere on Sept. 4.
