FOUND PEACHES IN PINE WOODS

Mr. Walter R. Strong, While Strolling About Ringgold's Point, Comes Across Strange Freak Of Nature

Some queer things happen in that wonderful region where wild game abound in almost unlimited numbers, known as Ringgold Point farm, in the Fifth District of Kent county and owned by Mr. Walter R. Strong, of Chestertown. The other day while in that section with a party of friends Mr. Strong was strolling over the wonderful combination of woodland, brier patch and fertile fields, when he came upon some peach trees, almost totally concealed in a dense pine forest. Only a most casual observer would have noticed that the peached which he gathered therefrom were not growing on the pine trees themselves.

This would have been a most peculiar thing to a later generation, who would wonder how it came about that peach trees should be growing there in a pine woods, but the answer is very simple. It seems that a big peach orchard once stood upon the place now covered by the pines and thrived and furnished a big profit to the owners of the land. Then came the days when the peach almost went to its death, as San Jose Scale and the Yellows played havoc with trees and science did not seem able to stop the dreadful destruction to speindid orchards.

Kent people, and, in fact, the people of the whole Eastern Shore, met this condition manfully, but the dread disease spread from orchard to orchard and gradually wiped them away. With the spread of the disease the growers of peaches slowly abandoned their orchards and, pulling them up by the roots, used them for firewood, and placed upon the place where they once yielded luscuous fruit, crops from which they could draw a profit.

This spot upon Ringgold's Point Farm was evidently allowed to hold its peach trees, but they stood abandoned, weeds and young trees springing up all around them, as nature prepared to wrest from man what he had won at the sweat of his brow and restore it to its original condition. And so these young pines grew higher and higher as the years rolled on, while the peach trees struggled manfully to hold the place where man had planted them to give him pleasure and benefit.

And so the unequal struggle between man's efforts and nature went on, to end in but one way. For a time the peach trees will continue to yield their impoverished fruit, until nature, having its way in the end of everything, will fling out gnarled branches, which will challenge the sun to penetrate, and the once proud stripling will gradually fade away, the leaves will yellow and, finally, the trunk will weaken. Then some day a storm will crash in from the bay The giant pines will moan their protest and the shore line of the farm will be lashed to fury by the heaving billows. Then, as fitting ending of man's futile combat with nature, the trees will crumble to the earth.

—On Monday night the stores of C. H. Kenton, Jr., and F. G. Jump, in Centreville, were broke into and robbed of money, cigarettes, penknives, etc.

I Am The Church!

I am the mother of heroes crowned and uncrowned. By my divine motherhood I make weak men strong and help the mighty to be holy.

I speak with assurance, Righteousness, Justice, Brotherhood are the alphabet of my language.

I bring good news. I carry upon my heart an atoning cross which is rooted and grounded in the heart of God—whose outstretched arms cover the ends of the earth and reach to the ends of the ages.

I am the guardian of the public peace. Without the thread of my weaving, no financial fabric would endure the test of a day. Deprived of my presence the law of the land would become the law of the jungle.

I suffer. My chief enemies are my professed friends, and the selfishness of many who bear my name, their pitiful pettiness, and their sinful divisions pierce my soul like a sword. But, despite all, I grow strong.

I bring forth beautiful sons and daughters. Nursed at my side they go forth in my name. They will not, they cannot, they must not forget the mother who bore them and who lives in their being. Their triumph is my glory.

I stand. For twenty centuries I have survived through flames and flood. Today, with a heavenly Book, which is the Magna Charta of Liberty, and without which no nation ever has been or ever can be great; with a Heavenly King the Risen and Coming Christ, with a program for the whole human race, that prepares for the coming of the kingdom, I stand dauntless in the face of wind and tide.

I call you to my heart, O mothers and daughters of Men! I thrust you forth, O soldiers of righteousness unto the ends of the earth on every battle front of human need. I build a wall of prayer about your immortal spirits! Your sacrifice and mine shall not be in vain. Together, one mighty army, we shall march "breast and forward" through the portals of the dawning day into the new era, our "promised land" —the new "earth, where dwelleth righteousness."

CURTIS WOODWORK

Sleep Outdoors in Comfort

WHEN you have been out doors all day breathing fresh air and gaining new strength, why lose your pep at night by sleeping in a stuffy bedroom? And if your work keeps you indoors during the day, then you have greater need for a sleeping porch.

Sleep once or twice on a comfortable porch like the one shown here and you will want to sleep out doors the whole year 'round. Winter's cold snowy nights will be as fascinating as summer's moonlit skies.

It's great to get up after a night's sleep on an open porch. You are refreshed and wide awake. The red blood pulses through your veins—you are eager and ready to begin the day.

We can help you add a cozy sleeping porch to your old home with little trouble or expense. Come in and talk it over. The sooner you have a sleeping porch the sooner your enjoyment of it begins.
