EX-GOV. BRADFORD'S GREAT SPEECH AT FREDERICK.

President Johnson's Policy Vindicated--The Radicals and their Measures Exposed.

We gave last week a brief outline of the speech of ex-Gov. Bradford, at Frederick, on the 18th inst. The speech has since been published in full, and is an able vindication of the reconstruction policy of President Johnson and a masterly exposition of the designs of the Radical leaders as fairly inferable from their measures. In regard to the Civil Rights bill he says "he feels as well assured as he can be of any event in the future" that the federal judiciary, whenever the question is raised, will declare it to be unconstitutional. He shows that the question of negro suffrage is forced upon the people in connection with the constitutional amendment changing the basis of representation, and that, however the Radicals may attempt to ignore it, it is fairly an issue in Maryland in the approaching elections. His arguments on this subject are clear and unanswerable, and must carry conviction to every unprejudiced mind—we give them in the author's own language. He says:

A few words now upon the political rights attempted to be conferred upon the negro; the radical press of this State and some of its orators strenuously insist that the question of negro suffrage is not an issue of the present canvass, and maintain that all arguments to the contrary are mere clap-trap. Yet, if report has spoken truly—and it is very current, and has never to my knowledge been contradicted—although their 6th of June convention adopted a resolution that declared negro suffrage not to be an issue, yet in the committee which reported that resolution it is said to have been carried but by a single vote, and the fact that some of their most eminent speakers have so far abstained from committing themselves to that declaration, shows that, even with the well known sentiment of the State on that subject, some of them are still candid enough to abstain from any endorsement of that declaration, and, indeed, are very well understood to be opposed to it.

It is amusing, too, to find occasionally one of their orators from another State who straggles into our's, who perhaps before he is posted as to the decided feeling of our people on this subject, or it may be because he is too honest to misstate the real purpose of his party, goes off in an open and undisguised argument in behalf of negro suffrage. You were favored with such a one, as I understand, in this city, a few evenings ago, who undertook to demonstrate that opposition to the negro's vote was nothing more than prejudice, and that in a few years you would so admit, and would very courteously raise your hats to your sable constituents. But whilst such testimony on the part of their crack orators might be quite sufficient for the purpose, I will not content myself with that alone, but come to what they have done in the way of legislation.

Congress, as you know, has passed a proposed amendment to the Constitution, the ratification of which will in our State as in others, be submitted to our next Legislature; it is highly important therefore, that you should correctly apprehend it.—I have only now the time to glance at one section of the new article proposed, the one that regulates the basis of representation. The radicals say, what is very true, that there is nothing in this section which absolutely compels any State to allow the negro to vote: and if it had compelled every State to admit them, it would in some respects at least, have been less objectionable, than in the shape in which it is. It would then, if ratified, have obliged every State alike to allow the vote of the negro, and though the numbers of them in each varies very materially, still it would in some aspects be more impartial than it now is.

But Congress understood very well that such a proposition would not be ratified in several of the so-called free States. It knows that in nine of those States their constitutions, unless in one or two of them very recently altered, has always excluded the negro from the polls, and that in several of them they will persist in that exclusion, and would therefore refuse to ratify any amendment of the constitution, which required them to change that policy; and thus to promote the success of some such amendment it became necessary to put it in some other shape, and after discussing various other propositions they at last settled upon the form in which the amendment ultimately passed. This amendment, stripped of all verbiage, presents confessedly the following proposition, that if in any State the negro is refused the right of suffrage, the national representatives from such a State shall be reduced according to the ratio which the negroes so excluded bear to the aggregate population of the same age and sex.

In other words, if a State has 50,000 white men 21 years of age, and 50,000 black men of the same age, and is entitled at present to four members of Congress, then if she refuses to allow these 50,000 negroes, to vote, she must submit to a reduction of one-half her Representatives, and be hereafter entitled to only two instead of four. Now note the effect of this on the various States. According to the last census, there is not an Eastern or a Western State where the adult male negro population exceeds two per cent. of its aggregate male population, except Connecticut, where the proportion is 5 per cent. In the greater number of these States it is less than 1 per cent.; in none of them, therefore, can the proposed reduction in the representative basis, in case they deny the right of voting to the negro, by any possibility affect the number of their Representatives. Take, for example, the State of Connecticut, which has, as I have just said, a larger proportion of negroes than any other State, except the late slave States; and that proportion is only 5 per cent. of her aggregate population of same age and sex. Connecticut is at present entitled to but four Representatives. She is therefore perfectly safe against any reduction of the number of her Representatives, for to take from her a single member she must first be entitled to twenty before a reduction at the rate of 5 per cent. can possibly affect her representation.

Connecticut, therefore, feeling perfectly assured that she can never lose a member on this account, and determined, doubtless, never to allow the negro to vote—for she refused to amend the Constitution to that effect only a few months since by a majority of six thousand—comes forward very promptly and is the first State to ratify the proposed amendment, as the newspapers informed us only a few weeks since. The same is the case in all the other so-called free States—the proportion of the negroes of the same age and sex with their voters being less in all of them than in Connecticut. The proposed alternative, therefore, of allowing the vote of the negro, or submitting to a reduction of the representative basis, is but a sham as to any of them; is, in fact, no alternative at all, and they are all at liberty still to deny, as they have heretofore done, the right of suffrage to the negro, and are subject to no penalty whatever for continuing to do so.

Now come to our own State and see how the case stands. Recurring to the census of 1860, and remembering that all who were then slaves are now free, and it will appear that we have in Maryland 128,371 white adult male population and 38,030 colored population of same age, &c.; the proportion of the latter to the aggregate being 22,9 or say 23 per cent. If it were only 20 per cent., and the proposed amendment is ratified, we must certainly loose one member of Congress and one Presidential elector, unless we agree to permit these 30,000 negroes the right of suffrage. Thus our good old State which within my memory, sent nine members to the House of Representatives, and has been from time to time curtailed in that number until she at present has but five, now that she is just starting, as she hopes, upon a new career, and has greater need than ever of representative power, must submit to still another reduction, and be content henceforth with four members if she refuses the right of suffrage to the negroes upon her soil already so numerous and likely for some time to increase. In the face of these undeniable facts, the radicals persist in declaring there is no question of negro suffrage at present in issue here. Your good sense, my friends, can not be so imposed on.
