A WARNING.

When will my weary heart find rest?
When cease the heaving of my breast?
And when the throbbing of my head—
Will it be when I am dead?
Ah! when I am dead, and not before,
Will my sufferings all be o'er;
I've sought for peace where love abound,
Yet, true joy, I never found.
I've joined the giddy in their mirth,
To while away my time on earth,
But now I see how blind I've been,
Its plunged me into grief and sin.
When money, plenty, I could spend,
Every man was then my friend;
But now they call me fool and knave,
And say I'll fill a drunkard's grave.
When the wine was sparkling bright,
Men with me then took delight,
But now they thrust me from their door,
And say, I'll drink with you no more.
My wealth is gone, my friends have fled—
I have no where to lay my head;
Oh! God, may this a warning be,—
It is too late, too late for me;
But for the young it may be time,
Save them from the poisoning wine:
Dash the goblet from the boy,
Let it not your health destroy.
'Twill rob you of true friends and health—
'Twill rob you of your golden wealth—
'Twill rob you of all earthly bliss—
From past experience I know this.
A good and loving wife I had,
But with the dead she now is laid;
Oh! had I listened to her prayers!
Had my heart been softened by her tears;
Had I harkened to my wife!
How different would have been my life.
With a deamon's air from her I turned,
And all her sweetest counsel spurned.
Wretch that I was, I broke her heart!
With a drunkard's curse and a gambler's art.
My children with their mother 's gone,
And now I wander all alone.
Again I say, the tempter shun!
And let the cursed stuff alone.

A DEBT NOT EASILY PAID.

If we possessed nothing more than what had been gained by our own efforts, we should be poor indeed. Taking no account of the good things with which God has filled the earth for the use of man—the sunshine, clouds, fruitful fields, teeming waters, air, and all the innumerable expressions of His bounty in nature—every man, woman, and child, are debtors to the skill and industry of our fellows—Our clothing, food, books, amusements, tools; in short, everything devised for comfort or happiness, require an amount of thought and work, which no one individual could ever accomplish. It has required ages of experiment and labor to perfect even the commonest articles of every day use. A boy's coat represents the toil of the shepherd, who raised the wool; of the genius of the inventor who devised the machinery for cleansing, carding, spinning and weaving it; the art of the chemist who prepared the dyes; labor of those who did their part in furnishing the thread and buttons; the work of the tailor; the skill of the hundreds of mechanics who constructed the tools necessary for all those who had a hand in completing the garment, and the efforts of those who furnished food for all thus engaged; why almost half the world had something to do toward making that coat; and thus it is with nearly all the things we possess. Now no one man can ever really pay for all he has received. When any one feels like "putting on airs," exalting himself, and boasting of his independence, it may benefit him to think that his debts are not yet paid, that they never can be. The best one can do under the circumstances is to exert himself to add something to the general stock of good things in the world. The Good Book sums it up in this wonderful sentence: Owe no man anything, but to love one another—showing that the debt of good will can never be fully discharged.—Amer. Agr.

THE DIVINE WILL.—When once we understand God's thoughts of mercy towards us, why should we hesitate to yield completely to his will? Why stop in the region of doubtful, doubting obedience? Having already renounced the world and its seductions, why not attain to the true liberty of the children of God? We know that it is for our sakes He would have us submit; that He asks us to yield our will to his, because it is our most pressing necessity that we should do so. Providence views the passing existence of man in relation to eternity; and if it arms him for warfare in this world, it is that he may conquer the kingdom of heaven, which suffereth violence. Earthly happiness, mixed, brief, uncertain, always ready to vanish, could not be the final end of God in our creation; his greatness contradicts so poor an end. His love endowed man with a more magnificent destiny. In view of that eternity which it behooves us to reconquer, evil is that which deters us from the true end, and good that which draws us on to it—even were it by trouble and sorrow. The instinct of happiness, left to man for noble and wise ends—to remind him of the state from which he fell, and that to which he is destined—this same instinct tends to drag heaven down upon earth, incites him to strive to possess what God only lends him.—Madame Swetchine.

THE REV. MR. A——was more eminent in his day for the brilliance of his imagination than the force of his logic. At one time he was preaching on "The Ministrations of Angels," and in the peroration he suddenly observed: "I hear a whisper!" The change of tone started the deacon, who sat below, from a drowsy mood, and springing to his feet, he spoke: "I guess it is the boys in the gallery."

THE POWER OF THE MIND.

The mind has many attributes, all closely connected with its every action; but the greatest of these is thought; for without it all the others would be entirely useless. Deprive it of thought, and it would be dead; give it that power, and almost instantaneously all other faculties spring up with sudden life, and man, the possessor of all, man, the temple at whose shrine, the mind, these priests are continually serving, is made a noble structure indeed. Who can conceive of the breadth or length of the immense field of thought over which the mind travels with the rapidity of lightning? It hardly rests for a moment upon a single object, when, without an effort, and almost without our knowledge, it speeds its course to another so far distant that the natural body never could follow it.

Perhaps at first its flight is limited to some little spot in our own land, that holds some object dear to us; then, like the seabird, it flies over the ocean, never pausing till it reaches some foreign port.—From there, it next wings its way to one of the distant planets, and seems to hold converse with another race which we may imagine there holds undisputed sway.—Onward, still onward it hurries with the speed of electricity, until the mind holds in its embrace the whole solar system, and even bows in adoration at the foot of the throne of the Most High.

PROTECTING TREES AGAINST WORMS.—The bandage system, which we were the first to suggest some fifteen years ago, and often referred to since, is the only effectual protection we have yet seen against the operations of the worm in fruit trees. We repeat again that in not a single instance have we ever had a worm in our dwarf pear trees where this system was properly followed. It is simply to bandage the bottom of the tree with any kind of muslin or cloth and tie it, letting the bandage be about six inches above ground and two inches below. It should be applied in February or as soon as the ground is in a fit condition to go upon. These bandages should be removed at the end of October. As long as this is continued we defy the worm. The bug lays its eggs an inch or two obove the ground early in the spring, that is as soon as the warm days in March will admit of its coming forth from its winter quarters; the eggs are soon hatched by the sun, being laid on the sunny-side of the trunk, and young grub finds its way down to the soft bark beneath the soil where it gradually works its way in. The bandage prevents both the laying of the eggs and the descent of the grub.—Let doubters try it. One man will bandage two hundred trees in a day. We have no doubt it will also protect the peach tree in the same way.—Ger. Tel.

A HAPPY WOMAN.—What spectacle more pleasing does the world afford than a happy woman contented in her sphere, ready at all times to benefit her little world by her exertions, and transforming the briers and thorns of life into roses of Paradise by the magic of her touch? There are those who are this happy because they cannot help it—no misfortunes dampen their sweet smiles, and they diffuse a cheerful smile around them as they pursue the even tenor of their way. They have the philosopher's stone; for without seeking the baser exchange of gold which may buy some sort of pleasure, they convert everything they touch into joy.—What their condition is makes no difference. They may be rich or poor, high or low, admired or forsaken by the fickle world; but the sparkling fountain of happiness bubbles up in their hearts and makes them radiantly beautiful. Though they live in a log cabin, they make it shine with a lustre which kings and queens might covet, and they make wealth a fountain of blessings to the children of poverty. Happy women are the brightest types of humanity.

SIZE IS NOTHING.—A talented young African of the boot-black persuasion, while dancing like St. Vitus over a customer's boots the other day, observed a neighbor poring wisely over a newspaper, whereupon he addressed him thus:

"Julius, what de debbel you lookin' at that paper fur? You can't read."

"Go 'way, fellah," replied the other, indignantly. "Guess I can read. I'se big enuf for dat."

"Big nuff!" retorted the first one, scornfully, "dat ain't noffin. A cow's big 'nuff to coth a mice, but she can't do it."

REMEDY FOR NEURALGIA.—The Nashville Dispatch says: A gentleman who has tried it, and is anxious to give the public the benefit of a very simple and efficacious remedy for the cure of neuralgia, hands us the following: Take two large tablespoonsful of cologne and 2 teaspoonsful of salt, mix them together in a small bottle. Every time you have any affection of the nerves, or neuralgia, simply breathe the fumes into your nose from the bottle, and you will be immediately relieved.

KILLING HOGS.

The Rural World gives the following advice to those about to engage in the exciting business of killing hogs:

The first of all is, kill a hog quietly—as quick as you can, and with as little excitement as possible. This holds good with respect to all animals. The reason is, the meat is better. There is not that feverish excitement, which hurts the flesh, develops a rank flavor, and injures the keeping quality. Some butchers shoot their hogs; others knock them in the head. The hog taken at once by a sufficient force at hand, and properly stuck, is, perhaps, as good a way as any, if not the best.—Let each man exercise his judgment, but do his work quick. Scald long—that is, be long at it—rather than short and hot, as the latter is pretty sure to fasten instead of loosen the hair. In cleaning a hog, the greatest attention should be paid to the head and feet. There is nothing better in a hog than soused feet; and they are the most difficult, with the head, to clean—but can be cleaned better when done immediately, hot from the water. Let your motions in dipping a hog be constant, with now and then an airing. This airing must be short, whether your water is hot or less hot. Too many hands, providing they are not in the way of each other, cannot be employed in scalding and cleaning a hog. When we say cleaning, we mean not only the hair taken off, but the water kept clean, the hog going in with as little dirt as possible. Dirty water will impart its flavor to the skin; it will affect it seriously. Even if the rind is used for soap, or thrown away, it will tell on the meat in the barrel. A man cannot be too cleanly in butchering hogs. Another thing: When dressed, there should be plenty of expansion to the carcass, so as to give a free admission of air, or thick pork, which in its nature is hot, will be touched with taint—a greenish cast will be given it before it is cut up. This difficulty is heightened by the excitement when the hog is killed. Quietly killed, thoroughly cleaned, and well packed when cold, in plenty of salt, and kept in a cool place—there will be no difficulty in keeping pork sound and sweet. Have good clean salt—a thing of some importance—and if your pork has been made from old corn, you have nothing more to wish.

WE insert in this connection the Germantown Telegraph's receipt for curing meat:

To one gallon of water, take one and a half pounds of salt, half pound of sugar, half ounce of saltpetre, half ounce of potash. In this ratio the pickle to be increased to any quantity desired. Let these be boiled together, until all the dirt from the sugar rises to the top and is skimmed off. Then throw it into a tub to cool, and when cold pour it over your beef or pork, to remain the usual time, say four or five weeks. The meat must be well covered with pickle, and should not be put down for at least two days after killing, during which time it should be slightly sprinkled with powdered saltpetre, which removes all the surface blood, &c., leaving the meat fresh and clean.

Some omit boiling the pickle, and find it to answer well; though the operation of boiling purifies the pickle by throwing off the dirt always to be found in salt and sugar.

If this receipt is properly tried, it will never be abandoned. There is none that surpasses it, if so good.

Recipe for Sausage Meat.

The following practice I have been in the habit of, for the last 25 years, and can confidently recommend it. It is important, in the first place, not to allow your meat to lay in bulk after it is separated from the body of the hog, but keep it spread out until you are ready to cut fine. If it lays sometime in bulk, your sausages will soon become strong. This plan prevents it. When you are ready, cut it in small pieces for grinding through a cutter, and weigh, in order for seasoning. Then for every 40 lbs. of meat take 13 oz. of salt, 4 oz. of best black pepper and 2 ozs. of sage, all of which mix together. Then mix this with your meat. Afterwards put it through your sausage grinder, and T. will find, if he is a judge of good sausage, an article, in that line, that is first-rate. —Corres. Country Gentleman.

AN interesting and amusing article in the November number of Harper's Magazine on newspaper advertisements, closes with the following advice: "To merchants: 1.—Advertise. 2. Advertise liberally. 3.—Advertise courageously. To the Public at Large: 1.—Read the advertisements. 2.—Study them, and verily they shall be for your profit."

A MOST extraordinary instance of patience was that of a judge, who, for two days, read his newspapers while a couple of attorneys contended about the construction of an act of the Legislature, and then ended the controversy by quietly remarking: "Gentlemen, that law has been repealed."

To prevent smoke from a lamp, soak the wick in strong vinegar, and dry it well before you use it; it will give much satisfaction.

THERE is one thing that confounds all infidelity—no one ever repented of being a Christian on his death bed.
