MAKING TOMATOES PAY.

Mr. Wilson's Address on the Culture of This Fruit, Before the Peninsula Horticultural Society.

At the meeting of the Peninsula Horticultural Society, held in Smyrna recently, Alfred J. Wilson, of Easton, delivered an address on tomato culture, which will prove of general interest just now when the farmers are cultivating this vegetable on a larger scale than ever before.

Mr. Wilson did not touch upon the early market crop, but confined himself to the great crop for canning purposes raised on the Peninsula, concerning which he said:

"I hear the pessimist cry out that we cannot grow tomatoes in paying crops any more. I must beg to differ with him, and hope to show his mistake.

"The raising of tomatoes, like all other crops, requires the best of our energies and the closest of attention, if you want it to show in your bank account on the right side. Begin at the beginning. Get the best seed that the market will afford; they are none too good. As to varieties, there are the Paragon, Acme, Queen, Stone, Royal Red and many others. Make your seed bed in warm, rich soil and have plenty of well rotted stable manure and use it plentifully. Fork it in and put the bed in as fine order as possible. Don't sow your seed too thick in the bed, for when planting time comes don't have your plants twelve inches high and as thin as a knitting needle, but six inches and stout and stocky.

"In regard to the land, you cannot be too careful. Select a plot of ground that is naturally drained, one that will not sob or scald. If you have not such land you had better underdrain it or stay out of the business.

"One word about the manure: don't forget it. After having selected your land, which should be clover soil if you have it, begin to haul the manure and give it a plenty. Don't spare it, let the forkfulls fall close together. Get your manure out early, better in the fall. Then the first open spell plough and drag, letting it lie until the spring, and after the ground gets warm and dry replough it and disc it both ways, and drag again and keep it in good tillage until planting time.

"In the meantime don't forget the young plants in bed. Attend to them for your old friends the Colorado beetle will be around.

"In regard to fertilizer, some prefer to drop it in hills; I would advise broadcasting. Use a good bone fertilizer with plenty of potash and nitrogen in it. If you cannot buy to suit you, mix it yourself, as compounding of fertilizer is no secret. Put in from 400 to 800 pounds per acre.

"As to time of planting, I would say not earlier that the 15th of May. Mark off your land both ways not closer than four feet and not over six. I would prefer six feet. Give them room, and if you have done your part they will cover ground. The first thing is setting, water the beds before drawing plants, and if the wind is south puddle the roots, being careful not to get any mud on the tops. Some of you may smile at the idea of planting on a south wind, but all I ask of you is to try it and you will be convinced.

"Set your plants firmly in the ground. Then in about four days start your fine-tooth harrow. It might be necessary to go over with a hoe and work close to the plants before starting your wide-toothed harrow. That will depend on the season. Don't spare labor. Don't raise weeds and grass, for packers don't want them.

"Some of my hearers may say that his father raised plenty of tomatoes in the waste places and along fence rows. I would answer him by saying that his grandfather raised cattle on waste places and without any grain. What would you think if I should say to you, feed your beautiful Jerseys or your mammoth Shorthorns on straw without any grain? What would you get? I would answer, bones. If any of my hearers wishes to raise tomatoes like his father did, let him get seed from his grandfather and he will succeed, I've no doubt. But if he wishes to raise tomatoes twelve inches in circumference, let him feed them, as he does his Jerseys and his Shorthorns.

"One grower of tomatoes says that if we follow this advice the market will be overrun with tomatoes. It has been several years since packers of tomatoes have been able to secure all the fruit they wanted. The greatest trouble they have encountered has been the poor quality of fruit. A packer said to me he had rather pay $10 a ton for perfect, well ripened fruit than $6 for such as he had to take. The market will take all the tomatoes we can grow. A great many are shipped direct to Baltimore. Baltimore packers are establishing houses all over this Peninsula. The growers of the Peninsula have a great fight on hand, as the growers of the great West are making tremendous strides in the growing and packing of fruit and vegetables. I would remind the members of this society to use every effort to keep up with the times, as these are days of expansion, as the history of packing will show. 1898 was the 51st year of packing tomatoes for commercial purposes, when Mr. H. A. Cros by, of Easton, Pa., entered the market and sold them at 50 cents per can. Think of it! Today they can be packed at 6¼ cents. This comes from the use of steam and scientific culture."
