LONGEST STRING TAKES PRIZE.

Novel "Fishing Contest" Started At Sunday-School.

A sanctuary as a rendezvous for fishermen is, to say the least, an innovation in Baltimore. Members of the congregation of Eutaw Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Eutaw, near Mulberry street, were surprised to read the following printed on the backs of programs handed to them yesterday afternoon as they entered the church to attend the annual "Rally Day" services:

WANTED—Boys and Girls, to go Fishing; good bait furnished and cash paid for fresh fish. For particulars apply at Eutaw Street Methodist Episcopal Church Sunday-school, Sundays, from 2 30 to 4 P. M.

As the churchgoers read this notice they marveled greatly. The solution of the mystery came when Mr. John G. Herman, the Sunday-school superintendent, announced during the exercises that the advertisement referred to a plan for encouraging scholars to bring other children into the Sunday-school. For every new pupil brought in, Mr. Herman explained, a cardboard fish would be given, on which is written the name of the fisher and the new scholar. All the fish will be strung and the boy or girl having the longest string at Christmas will recive an aquarium of gold fish. Furthermore, at that time all fish, with the exception of jelly fish, mulletheads and eels, will be bought at 10 cents each. Jelly fish are those new pupils so brought in who, according to the record book, had been present only one Sunday; mulletheads are those who had been present only two Sundays, and eels those that slipped out after three Sundays' attendance. There will no doubt be many juvenile fishermen who will immediately proceed to try their luck.

$500,000 FOR HIS KINDNESS.

A Wilmington Man Remembered For An Act Twenty-Two Years Ago.

John T. Vandergrift, of 46 Foster St., Wilmington, Del., has returned from Atlanta, Ga., with a draft for $10,000 and a guarantee that he will receive about $500,000 left him by John McClary, a retired miner, who died in Atlanta recently.

The legacy is for kindness rendered by Vandergrift to McClary, a stranger to him, who was taken ill on the steamer Elizabeth 22 years ago, on the river between St. George's, Del., and Philadelphia. When the stranger became ill Vandergrift removed him to his stateroom, gave him whiskey to revive him, saw that he was safely placed in a hotel in Philadelphia and secured a physician. Vandergrift did not know the stranger, but the latter found out the name of the man who had aided him and remembered it. A little more than a month ago Mr. McClary died in Atlanta and left a will with Lawyer Hullman Barlow, of that city, providing that his entire estate should go to Vandergrift. The latter received a letter asking him if he were the man and could he prove his claim. He went to Atlanta and did so.

Mr. Barlow expects that the property, which is located in New York, Baltimore, Atlanta, Philadelphia and Providence, will be turned over to Vandergrift by November 15. He says he does not know the value of the property, but has been told that it is worth half a million.

Vandergrift says he will build himself a house and continue to live here. He is a machinist, about 45 years old, employed by the Betts Machine Company.

CORN CROP IS ENORMOUS.

United States Raised More Than Enough to Supply the World.

In the history of cereal productions there has never been such an enormous crop of corn as is being gathered in the United States this year. It will aggregate 2,589,951,000 bushels, or more than the entire corn crop of the world for 1902. The corn raised in the United States will be sufficient to supply the needs of the world for this and next year, even should there be a total failure in 1903.

Corn harvesting is now in progress in the United States, and not until snow flies in December will this enormous task be ended. Even then farmers further South will not have finished husking the golden years standing in their fields of brown. They know it makes little difference so far as prices are concerned. A record of sales of corn in the past 10 years show that the highest prices are obtained in the late fall and winter, and that prices are 25 per cent. below the average immediately after the gathering of the crop begins in the early autumn. Last year the corn burned as it stood ripening in the fields, just a few weeks before it had matured. But this season there has been no droughts in the corn sections. Nor have there been any floods of a general nature. The weather, in fact, has been ideal for corn growing. The stalk have grown rank, the ears have spread and lengthened until 12-inch ears and 15 feet stalks are not uncommon in the corn belts. In Kansas they are telling of farmers getting lost in their cornfields.

There are about 5,000,000 farms in the United States, of which 3,000,000 produce corn. The average cost of producing an acre of corn is $5.73, divided in this way: Seed, 77 cents; planting, 78 cents; cultivating, $1.02; husking and putting in crop, $1.16; wear and tear of tools, 23 cents; rent of land or interest on value, $2.47. The average cost of production per bushel is 14 cents, and during the last ten years the average price of corn to the farmer has been 26 cents. The average yield in 10 years is 20 bushels per acre, hence the profit on corn land per acre can be reckoned at $2.40. This is less than the profit on wheat, and for that reason corn, which has for many years been a popular crop, is slowly giving away to wheat.
