County Liabilities for Injuries Upon Public Roads.

Among the important opinions handed down in the Court of Appeals the past week, was one affecting the County Commissioners of Baltimore County in the matter of damages upon public roads to which they are subject by suit upon frequent occasions.

In the case of the County Commissioners of Baltimore County vs. Hattie E. Wilson, reversing the judgment of the Circuit Court for Harford County rendered therein, Judge Schmucker delivering the opinion. All of the Judges were present except Judge Page, but two of them—Judges Briscoe and Jones—dissented from this opinion.

Mrs Hattie E. Wilson, the appellee, while traveling at night on the county roads of Baltimore county, was injured by being thrown from her carriage, which was overturned by running against a pile of stones about three feet high placed on the roadside, by Frank Hurline, a neighboring farmer, with the permission of Christopher Hall, one of the Road Commissioners, but without the knowledge of the County Commissioners. She recovered damages at the trial below, but the Court of Appeals reverses this judgment. It says it is conceded by the Public General Law that the County Commissioners of a county are liable for personal injuries resulting from a failure to keep the county roads in proper condition, but that by Chapter 675 of the Acts of 1900 creates a Board of Road Commissioners for each district and requires them to take charge of all the roads and bridges in their respective districts, to keep them free from obstructions and hindrances, etc., and also provides for a Roads Engineer with advisory powers, who has entire control of the Baltimore county roads. By the local law, which prevails over the general law whenever the two conflict, the County Commissioners of Baltimore County have been so shorn of the very powers and duties which constituted the only ground of their liability for such damages no longer exists. If it be objected that the conclusions which we have reached as to the effect of this local road law deprives the users of roads in Baltimore county of that redress for injuries resulting from defects therein, which is afforded to those using roads in other portions of the State "we are compelled to reply that the situation must be sought at the hands of the Legislature, and not the Courts."

IN MEMORIAM.

We miss you everywhere.
