A Wonderful Saving.

The largest Methodist Church in Georgia calculated to use over one hundred gallons of the usual kind of mixed paint in painting their church.

They used only 32 gallons of the Longman & Martinez Paint mixed with 24 gallons of linseed oil. Actual cost of paint made was less than $1.20 per gallon.

Saved over eighty ($80 00) dollars in paint, and got a big donation besides.

EVERY CHURCH will be given a liberal quanity whenever they paint.

Wears and covers like gold.

Many houses are well painted with four gallons of L. & M. and three gallons of linseed oil mixed there with.

Wears and covers like gold.

These Celebrated Paints are sold by F. H. Harper & Son, Still Pond; J. W. Ivens, Worton, Md., and Smith & Graham, Chestertown, Md.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

Parts of the Old World as Seen Through Eastern Shore Eyes.

[Written especially for the KENT NEWS.]

The pleasure I had anticipated from a trip up the English channel was denied me on account of darkness. With the lights of Cherbourg fading in the distance came new ones twinkling over the bow, and as they are somewhat different from our lights along the Chesapeake they were a source of some interest and served in some measure to make up for the loss of a sight of the shore lines. One can plainly see from the deck of the steamer the English and French lights particularly as you approach the narrow part between Dover and Calais One very peculiar as well as powerful flash light attracted my attention on the French side near Bolougne. Upon inquiry I was informed that it was an electric light and considered the most powerful flash light along any coast in the world. It reminded me in its suddenness, of some giant fire fly, that remaining stationary, sent out its rays at regular intervals as the small fly do on dark nights in summer time with us in Maryland. The analogy is however a bit disturoed by the fact that this giant sends out a sharp, binding, purplish flash or spark that is repugnant and trying to the eye, while our little fire fly gives forth a soft, mellow spark that is not at all disagreeable.

Upon going on deck in the morning I found we had run through the channel and were well out in the North sea Here I was permitted to see the greatest number of small craft of various sorts that I had ever known even in our own well filled Chesapeake. Schooners and sloops predominated but the small steam craft was also everywhere in evidence. I then remembered I was off the shores of the Netherlands, whose people have been seafaring for many centuries. When you remember that these small craft (many not larger than our larger canoes) were completely out of sight of land on a water noted for its turbulence, you can at once appreciate my wonder and admiration for their venturesomeness. The schooner, large and small, is rigged in a directly opposite manner to the American vessels. Here the foremast is the taller one surmounted by a topmast, while well aft is a smaller spar that carries a sail a little larger than a jib, cut however in the regulation way. These people, so thickly scattered over the North sea, are the fisher folk that largely supply this part of the world with the splendid members of the finny tribe found in all hotels.

The shores of Holland were soon passed with here and there a monster wreck showing as proof of the dangerous character of the many and shifting shoals that lie hereabout. As we steamed into the Elbe low sand spits cropped up here and there and were marked by lights of one or another kind while the channel was marked off by both buoy and light-ship. Large passenger ships such as we were on do not carry their cargoes to Hamburg but stop at the mouth of the river Elbe at a place called Cuxhaven with fine stone piers or docks where the 1st and 2nd class passengers are met by special trains and carried by rail to Hamburg some 50 or 60 miles away. This trip by rail carried us through a low flat country where marsh land was very much in evidence and where the reclaiming process seemed to be necessary again and again.

Much to interest the Marylander greets you on every side as you pass through this agricultural section. As a matter of fact everything is either odd or antique to Western eyes except the abiluitous crow that looks and sounds the same here as elsewhere all over the world. The land is tilled in ridges apparently about a hundred feet wide and often only about 3 or 4 hundred feet long. This of course, is done for drainage. Tidewater canals penetrate in every direction constituting largely the means of distributing the farm products. Harvest was at its heighth as we came through and what most surprised me was the fact that the sickle, which many of our farmers have never seen was the means often used in gathering the oats, barley and rye that grew along the rail road. Where this was not used a scythe, much like our grass scythe, was used and a hand rake carried by the binder (often a woman or girl) to draw the straw together for a sheaf. No reaper or mower was in evidence from Cuxhaven to Hamburg.

The stork with his nest built often on the roof of some farmhouse you see at short intervals along the road, stalking solemnly after horse or cow, or else resting on one leg in solitary grandeur on some ridge of land, as though in deep and solemn meditation He looks very much like our blue heron or crane except he's white and black.

One thing these people do lead us in ho[illegible] the stability of their farm an[illegible] buildings. All [illegible] of bri[illegible] all roofs [illegible]

POOR EXCURSION SEASON.

Baltimore Fire, Slocum Disaster and Wet Summer Made Business Light —Regular trips are Ending.

"The excursion season, which practically closed Wednesday week, was a disappointment," said Capt. William C. Eliason, president of the Tolchester Steamboat Company. "Several circumstances seriously affected the Baltimore excursion business and caused it to drop considerably below last year's mark.

"First of all, the Baltimore fire was a serious setback. Few people realize to what extent the big blaze operated against the excursion traffic, and I am disposed to think the local summer resorts also felt its affect. Hundreds of people hadn't the money, and other hundreds were led to economize in the matter of summer pleasures.

The Slocum horror in New York harbor just at the opening of the summer also had a serious effect upon the business of all of our excursion lines. It caused hundred of timid women (and women are the chief patrons of the summer excursion boat) to stay at home. The cool, rainy summer was the third of the series of causes which had a depressing effect. We are still running special excursions, but the Tolchester trips on the excursion schedule closed yesterday. Taken all in all, the season has not been up to the average."

"We have had a fairly good excursion season, but not up to the average," said Mr. John C. Bosley, general freight and passenger agent of the Queen Anne's Railroad Company. "The General Slocum disaster, the effect of Baltimore's big fire upon thousands of people, and the wet, cool summer all had their effect upon our passenger business. We closed our Cape May trips September 6, but expect to continue the Rehoboth trips until the end of the month."

"The excursion season with us is ahead this year," said Mr. William F. Bell, who has had charge of the Baltimore, Chesapeake and Atlantic Railway Company during the summer. We have carried more passengers than ever before, despite several strong factors against us."

"The excursion season has been a sad disappointment," said Mr. Clarence Shriver, of the Baltimore and Philadelphia Steamboat Company. "The three great factors against all excursion business by water this summer have been the disaster to the General Slocum in New York harbor, the continued cool, wet weather and the effect of the big fire. These causes confronted us on every trip, and had a depressing effect upon our summer passenger traffic."
