REMEMBER IT.

If you have received a kindness, remember it. If you have done a kind act, forget it. We know this is contrary to custom, for every day we hear someone bragging how much he or she has done for a neighbor, and at the same time bewailing the fact that the action was not appreciated. A short time ago we heard a man bragging that he had done a great deal for a certain woman in town. On being asked what he had done, he replied that he had let her do his family washing. If the truth were known, the fact would probably be proved that she did it at a mighty low figure.

Sharks.—A number of sharks have been seen in Chester river lately and Capt. Emory Crouch caught a big one in his fish seine last week while fishing near Deep Point. It weighed 300 pounds and was 10 feet long.

A SATANIC PROVERB.

Skin for skin, all that a man hath will he give for his life.—Job, ii, 4.

The first trial of the faith and integrity of Job consisted in the destruction of his property and the loss of his sons and daughters, Satan had accused Job of serving God for what God had given him, and had said that if God would withdraw from Job his material prosperity he would "curse Him to His face." Permission was given to satan to make the trial, and, notwithstanding its severity, we are told that in all his trouble "Job did not sin with his lips." He had gained for himself a complete victory and had proved the accusation of satan to be absolutely false.

After the trial, however, satan returns and God asks him to explain why Job still maintains his integrity and faith. The answer of satan came in the form of a proverb, "Skin for Skin, all that a man hath will he give for his life," or in other words, satan charges that all of the goodness of Job is due to selfishness and that men everywhere will part with everything to save their lives and when their lives are touched they will rebel against God and will sacrifice the lives of others to preserve their own, and will part with their property and their honor to save themselves from death. Applying the proverb to Job, satan says to God: "Touch his body with a sore disease that threatens his life and his insincerity will be at once discovered." So for the second time God permits His servant to be tried again, this time by a sore bodily affliction which racks his frame with excruciating pain and drives his best friends from him because of its loathsomeness.

To the casual observer this santanic proverb looks very much like truth itself and while it has some truth in it, yet in the main it is absolutely false. It is true that God has placed within the breast of every man the love of life and the fear of death: it is also true that we intuitively seek to preserve our bodies from injury and death, and instances may be quoted which show that even mothers have killed and eaten their children to save themselves from starvation; and still other instances may be shown where the selfishness of men has been so great that they have forfeited their honor and all else that they might save their own lives. But is is equally true that this is not the case with all men. The proverb of satan ignores entirely the higher life which some men lead. As long as we have a Golgotha in our history the lesson of self-sacrifice which it teaches must prove the proverb of the devil untrue. Every martyr for the Christian religion is an argument against the charge of satan. Every soldier who has died for his country proves it untrue, and where some mothers have sacrificed their children to save their own lives, there are many more instances where mothers have sacrificed themselves to save their children. Some men may part with their integrity under the pressure of threatening death, but there are others like Job who know of a higher life and who will not part with their faith or uprightness even under the pains of death. From the time of the erection of the cross of Christ on Calvary's hill to the present generation there have been thousands of men and women who have lived far beyond the selfish doctrine of "Skin for skin or tit for tat," and have taught the world its greatest lessons in self-sacrifice, and for the sake of truth and righteousness have endured unjust punishment of the body coupled with undeserved ignominy and reproach. This great servant of God called Job proved satan to be a liar and his proverb a subtle twisting of a partial truth.

The purpose of satan is to deceive and to destroy our faith in God, and to do this he frequently places his fiercest batteries against God's strongest servants. His arguments against the piety of Job were not unlike those used to Eve in the Garden of Eden or those used to Christ in the wilderness. They all partake of that keen and shrewd character that blends falsehood with truth and blesses error with a text. The disease brought upon Job was painful, loathsome and under ordinary circumstances incurable, but the trial had but one object in view and that was to demonstrate to the world that faith in God was a profession without sincerity and that mankind was selfish to the heart, and when his life was touched he would renounce everything that was virtuous to save it. God has alaways had confidence in man; satan never has, and his purpose is to destroy the confidence of God in man and man in God. There is a higher life into which many men and women have entered. It is the life that holds its property to make the world better, a life that cultivates its children to nobility of purpose and gives itself for the preservation of the home, church and state. The true believer in God may sometimes err and make mistakes—father may rise against son, brother against brother, friend against friend, and all the world may seem to live upon the proverb of satan; but deeper than the deepest quarrel, wider than the widest sin, there is in the human heart the spirit of self-sacrifice that can look down from the painful cross and say "Father, forgive," and hope for redemption by the gift of itself.

"Skin for skin, all that a man hath he will give for his life." The human race has never been more maligned than by this proverb of the devil.

A GEORGIA county puts its convicts to work on public thoroughfares dressed in Mother Hubbard gowns to prevent their escape. If anything can act as a deterrent to crime and the wild, untamed passions of men, this Georgia device seems equal to the emergency. A man might face ruin, imprisonment and even death, but public exhibition in a Mother Hubbard would daunt even the iron nerve of a Nero or a Napoleon.
