RING HAMS.

cularly interesting at this season.
e recipe must be worthy of trial, as we y the remarks preceding it, that it is a plication at the request of several Far-who have tried and know it to be good.
r every one hundred pounds of meat, five pints of good molasses, (or five ds brown sugar.) five ounces saltpetre, eight pounds rock salt—add three gal-of water, and boil the ingredients over ntle fire, skimming off the froth or scum rises. Continue the boiling till the salt is dissolved. Have the hams nicely nd trimmed, packed in casks with the k end down, as the pickle will thus strike tter. When the pickle prepared as ae is sufficiently cool, pour it over the s. They may lie in pickle from two to weeks, according to the size of the pie-or the state of the weather—more time g required in cold than in warm weather.
f or mutton hams, or tongues intended moking and drying, may be cured accor-g to this mode, and will be found excel-

There are other modes of pickling hams ch are much esteemed in various coun-
s. In that excellent and agreeable work tled "Farming for Ladies," we find the owing directions for preparing the celeted "Hambro' Pickle," which is said to be equally applicable to beef, pork, tongues, &c. "To each gallon of water, put one pound and a half of common salt, a quarter of a pound of coarse brown sugar, and one ounce of saltpetre; boiled, and to be carefully scummed. After standing in a proper vessel until quite cold, the meat may be immersed, and will be fit for use in ten days, and improve for months; but it must be carefully kept pressed down by means of a cover, and a clean heavy stone. The pickle must be watched, and when any scum begins to rise, the meat must be taken out and the liquor reboiled, and scummed and cooled as before; at the same time half a pound more salt must be added; but no raw salt is to be applied at any time. The meat is to be returned when the pickle is quite cold, say after ten or twelve hours. Tongues will require a month, a month at least, and are improved by the addition of an ounce of bay salt, added to the above. One clove of garlic, half an ounce of allspice, and as much whole pepper, boiled with the ingredients, much improves it."

THE MINISTRY AND THE CORN LAWS.

Events of a most painful character have at length forced from men of all parties an acknowledgement of the folly of that policy which attempts to restrict the supply of the first necessaries of life. We are on the eve of a fulfillment of the worst predictions which have been made of the result of such a policy. All parties now see, in the necessities of the moment, a sudden suspension of the corn laws as inevitable. Ireland is threatened with famine, and the whole of Great Britain with severe scarcity. Would that the conviction which has now been forced upon men by this impending calamity, had been so at a period when it might have been prevented. Now the most that can be done immediately, is a very inadequate effort to alleviate it.

But what will Sir Robert Peel now do, first for the temporary relief of the country—and next, for the permanent settlement of the corn law question, and the prevention of such a calamity in future?

The reports from all parts of Ireland, as well as this country, become worse every day; and feeding the masses of the people is no longer so much a question of cost, as it is possibility. In Ireland particularly, where the habitual and almost sole food of the people has proved nearly a total failure the matter is most urgent. The Standard admits "that it now seems pretty plain that a suspension of the corn laws ought to be resorted to."

Whether this will be done by an order in council, or by summoning Parliament early in November, as has already been reported, we cannot say, but we are disposed to think that both means will be resorted to. If the ministers took the responsibility of opening the ports, they would also be desirous, at as early a period as possible, to obtain the sanction of Parliament for their act. The delay of waiting for the assembling of Parliament, at even the earliest day and then, the lengthened discussion which would ensue with regard to the policy, if ministers were to wait for an act of Parliament, would defeat, in a great measure, the object in view. The chief article which could be imported for the relief of Ireland, besides Indian corn from the U. States, would be oats from Archangel and the other northern ports. But if much delay occur, those ports will be closed by the frost until the spring is far advanced. The habits of Ireland and Scotland point to oatmeal as the best substitute for potatoes; and fortunately this is the crop which, more than any other, has this year every where been abundant. If a large supply of oats and Indian corn can be secured, and the laboring population of Ireland furnished with employment by the progress of the railway now making, and those contemplated, to enable them to purchase those articles, then the pestilence, which at present hangs over that unhappy country, may be in some measure averted. An objection has been raised to opening the ports, or to assembling Parliament at an unusual time, in consequence of the supposed alarm which such steps might create. But assuredly the alarm must be much greater which would attend the daily repetition of facts giving evidence of famine and starvation, than by the best means being used to alleviate the condition of the country. Instead of creating alarm, those acts on the part of the government, ought rather to allay those apprehensions which at this moment, have more effect on men's mind than they are willing to acknowledge.

But whatever may be the plans adopted by the Government for temporary relief, it is impossible that Sir Robert Peel can meet Parliament in the next session without some distinct proposition for a final settlement of the corn law question. This is the grave question on which the attention of the country should be fixed. What is Sir Robert Peel's idea of a permanent settlement of this question, may be best inferred from his policy with regard to the raw materials and the other essential elements of the industry of the people. But if Sir Robert Peel has experienced so much difficulty to reconcile his colleagues to a temporary suspension of the corn laws, how much more must he find to any proposition for such a settlement as alone he could think permanent. Another mortification of the sliding scale would be too absurd a proposal for any minister to make. For a fixed duty, there will be less pretence than ever. All agree that, as a source of revenue, nothing could be so objectionable as a duty from corn. Experience proves that a free import and a low price would be more profitable to the exchequer than any duty which could be imposed.—The dilemma in which the country is placed at this moment would have rendered it even more impossible to maintain a fixed duty, than it is to wait till the scale vanishes away. Sir Robert Peel is himself distinctly pledged against the adoption of a fixed duty; nor do we believe, in the altered state of the country, and after the experience of the present year, that Lord J. Russell would give his sanction to such a proposal. One thing is abundantly certain, that such a proposal would meet with no support in the country.

REJOICE, ALL YE OF WEAK STOMACHS. Formerly when you were sick, you were in for it, as physic only sickened you ten times, but now you have Clickener's Pills, which are bits of sugar in the mouth, but all that is mild, quiet, but irresistible in the stomach. To take any but Clickener's Sugar-coated Pills now would be an act in the face of reason. A man might as well shave himself with a rough reaping hook, having at the same time a keen razor in his dressing case.

In serious truth, Clickener's Sugar-coated Pills are the best general family medicine that has ever been introduced, for they have all the purifying advantages of physic, without any of those drawbacks which makes physic such an aversion to most people.

[PRICES of GRAIN &c.—corrected weekly.]

Baltimore, Nov. 29th, 1845.

GRAIN.—The supply of Wheat at the first of the week was light, and sales were made of good to prime reds at 132a133c, and ordinary to good at 128a132c; but within the last few days the receipts have increased considerably and prices declined. We now quote sales of good to prime reds at 125a128 cents, and ordinary to good at 118a125cts., and white wheat for family flour at 133a136c, and the market tending down. We note large sales on Wednesday of Penn. white wheat at 136c, and red do. at 132c, and to-day at 128a129 for reds. Sales to-day of Md. new Corn at 70c for white and 70a71c for yellow, which is a slight decline since Tuesday. We quote Oats at 39a40c, with sales. The grain market generally is drooping.

POSTCRIPT.

Election of Mr. Calhoun.—Mr. Calhoun was on Wednesday last elected by the Legislature of S. Carolina a Senator in the Congress of the U. States, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Huger.

Important if True.—The Boston Post has good "grounds for believing that the English Government will immediately recall Mr. Packenham, who it is understood has been placed hors du combat in the negotiation about Oregon with Mr. Buchanan, and send a new Minister to this country to adjust the differences between the two nations upon more liberal terms than have heretofore been insisted upon by Great Britain."

WASHINGTON——Latest Intelligence.—There was an informal meeting on Saturday evening last of the Democratic members of Congress. It is said that nothing was done on account of the absence of many members from the city. The House will probably organize to-day. If so the annual message of President Polk will be transmitted at 12 o'clock, M. Mr. Davis of Indiana, appears to be the prominent Democratic candidate for the Speaker's chair. Others, however, are named.

A Whig caucus met on Saturday night—it done nothing that has publicly transpired.

There is much speculation about the election of the minor officers of Congress, viz:—Sergeant-at-arms; door-keeper, &c. This the members can settle to their own fancy—their constituents care but little on whom, personally, the choice shall fall.

The 'message' is looked for with uncommon interest. Our readers shall have it as early as circumstances will allow us to place it before them.

383 ACRES of Land,

WOOD.

It is rented to a good tenant for next year, and will be sold subject to one year's lease.
