The Plough, the Loom & the Anvil.

No man should embark in a business of which he need be ashamed, or give his time and his mind to what he does not believe to be honorable as well as useful. The editor of the "PLOUGH, THE LOOM, AND THE ANVIL" has no hesitation in soliciting, for that journal, the patronage of those who are disposed to regard Agriculture as an intellectual concern, one like every other, to be improved and advanced, the more and the better for undertaking the principles that belong to it; and for learning, as they occur, the discoveries and improvements that science and experience combined may bring to light in the practice of it.

Considering the aid he derives from able correspondents, and the best sources of information, at home and abroad, and the constant devotion of his own mind and heart to the subject, for more than thirty years, the Editor would be sorry, in this case, not to believe, that any single number is worth the subscription for a year, to any one reading it in a true spirit of inquiry and desire for useful information. But though he finds himself now, for the first time in the course of thirty years of anxious effort, depending for a livelihood on the success of his labours for the landed interest, he by no means wishes any one to subscribe on that account. Those who think themselves not in want of more knowledge, or that, as some say, nothing new is to be learned in the art of cultivation and husbandry, ought not to subscribe, unless it be to hand the work over to their boys, every mother's son of whom ought to have it in their power to store up the information it contains.

"THE PLOUGH, THE LOOM, AND THE ANVIL" has nothing to do with party politics, nor with any politics except that which directly concerns the plough and those who live by it.—What he believes that to be, may be inferred from the title of his work; but his motto and his practice is "hear both sides;" his object being, not victory in support of any particular theory, but to overtake and embrace the naked truth, wherever it may be found. Those who differ with them in opinion, will yet find in the scientific and practical part of the work, ample remuneration for their subscription; and besides, all enlightened men, may well believe with Mr. Jefferson, that error even may be safely tolerated where reason is left free to combat it—while all those who believe in and would promote the policy that tends to draw the consumer as near as practicable to the side of the producer, ought, perhaps, whatever may be their own pursuit, to feel in some sort called upon to support this first endeavor of an agricultural journal, to desiminate a knowledge of the true political economy, along with the most improved and approved practice of the arts of cultivation and husbandry.

Every mail brings assurance that the doctrine it inculcates is working and leavening the mass, like the leaven thrown by the good housewife "into three measures of meal;" and that is obvious even in regions where heretofore it might have been said, "For this people's ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed."

The terms are $3 for a single subscriber, for one year—$5 for two copies for one year, or for 1 copy for 2 years—and $2 each when 5 unite in a club and send on $10. In each of these three cases, the person remitting, will be entitled to a copy of "The elements of Agriculture," or of Guenon's celebrated "Cow Book," at their option. Money may in all cases be remitted by mail at the risk of the Editor and Proprietor,

J. S. SKINNER,
Philadelphia, Pa.

P. S.—Many gentlemen of the highest respectability have remitted for five and ten copies, and undertaken to find the subscribers. Subscriptions may commence at any time, though it is better to have all the numbers of a volume complete, as a full index accompanies the last number. This volume commenced with the July number, and the back numbers may be had, as well as the first volume, which can be sent in paper cover, by mail, at a cost of only 36½ cents for postage. Each number consists of not less than 64 pages making a volume of nearly 800.

He respectfully returns his thanks to his friends and the public for past patronage, and solicits a continuance of the same.
