Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper.

A Slight Fire.—What might have been a serious fire occurred underneath the kitchen at "Indiantown," on Chester river, the summer residence of Judge Blanchard Emory, about midnight Thursday of last week. The origin of the fire was that the servant girl employed by Mr. Emory had taken some ashes from the stove shortly after supper hour, put them into a wooden box and set it underneath the kitchen. The ashes began to smoulder, burning the box then the flames made rapid headway for the dwelling. After burning through the kitchen floor Mr. Edward B. Emory, of Baltimore, had an occassion to go to the stable, which is in the rear of the dwelling, to water a horse, and it was he who discovered the fire. He soon extinguished the flames. The damage was slight.

OUT of THE SHADOWS

By Fannie Heaslip Lea

Copyright, 1906, by Ruby Douglas

In the gentle current of Miss Sarah's life by far the wildest eddies were Paola's love affairs. Miss Sarah had never had a lover herself—she had always been too busy taking care of Paola, who was the younger sister, a slim, pale creature, with vivid eyes and a head that habitually drooped a little as though weighted by its own gold hair and a sense of languorous melancholy.

Beside Miss Sarah's old time courtesies Paola was as an orchid to a pansy, but underneath the melancholy was a certain irresponsible deviltry, a certain intangible witchery, that brought the most eligible youths of the neighborhood in suppliance to her feet and filled Miss Sarah with unceasing wonder and amazement.

Whenever a new victim appeared upon the scene Miss Sarah thrilled with apprehension. As he was friendly, she approved of him; as he was more conspicuously attentive, she watched for him; then in gentle perplexity that never vanished with added experience she saw him hover, advance, retreat, hover again and plunge. When the little comedy was played out she took up her knitting with a sigh of relief, opened her volume of Felicia Hemans at the purple bookmark and prepared to rest before another siege.

Paola herself slipped from one emotional cataclysm to another, as the slender moon from cloud to cloud. They veiled her vivid calm for a moment, but she always emerged unfettered on the other side.

She had been wearing Francis Lockwood's roses for a month, when Miss Sarah one night, after three gentle calls unanswered, stepped through the long French window on to the moonlit veranda with a crimson scarf in her hand. The June night called for no such guard against its close, sweet warmth, but on the subject of damp and dew Miss Sarah was inflexible.

"Paola," she said anxiously, then, since there was no Paola in all the shadow dappled length of the veranda, raised her voice a little and called again, "Paola, dear!"

A mocking bird in the cedar by the gate gurgled a liquid impertinence that ended in a low call to his mate, but the rest was silence.

Miss Sarah looked across the lawn, then down at her feet.

"Paola must have this scarf," she said to herself sternly, "and I suppose she is sitting on the bench by the Black Prince—the most imprudent child!" That the Black Prince was a beloved rosebush saved Miss Sarah's remarks from their apparent impropriety, and, mindful of her steps, she hurried into the path that led to the Black Prince's domains across the lawn.

The moon burned white above her in a cloudless sky, and Miss Sarah responded delicately to the influence of the hour. A faint fragrant dream, with boyish eyes, called to her as she went slowly down the path, and young faces swam mistily in her memory as if they had drifted there with the smell of the box in the hedge.

She thought of the night her mother died, another June; of a flowered gown she had worn the day she was sixteen, of a poem, something about daffodils, or was it roses?

"'The love that came with the daffodils and went away with the roses'—that was it," said Miss Sarah, with a little sigh of satisfaction, "only the daffodils come back with the spring and every summer there are roses, so I really don't see the sense of that. Those love songs are nearly always rather silly." She stopped to thrust back the daring sweetness of a yellow banksia. "The garden is very sweet tonight," said Miss Sarah to herself, "and God walked in the cool of the garden. I wonder was it like this." She paused on the edge of the Black Prince kingdom, where it lay half in shadow, and lifted her eyes to the moon.

"Oh, dear!" said Miss Sarah, almost aloud, "what a beautiful night it is," which was Miss Sarah's way of saying that the world was very good and she was happy. Then she lifted her skirts a little higher and sped into the heart of the rose garden.

Paola was sitting on the bench by the Black Prince—Miss Sarah saw that at once—and beside her was young Lockwood, as Miss Sarah had also foreseen, and Paola's head was thrown back, and one of Paola's slim white arms lay like a shimmer of moonlight along the back of the bench. "Positively inviting rheumatism," murmured Miss Sarah miserably.

She was within a few feet of them and a call trembled on her lips, when Paola's own voice stopped her.

"Go on," said Paola in a soft, hurried whisper, and Miss Sarah by some queer instinct drew back into the shade of the great oak behind the bench, fearful lest an incautious movement would betray her, fearful almost of her own breathing, for Miss Sarah was learned in the ways of Paola's suitors, and it was one of her best learned lessons never to interrupt them. So she drew back and waited, innocent of any desire to eavesdrop.

"Go on," said Paola again, and young Lockwood's voice came out of the deeper shadow, low and vibrant and rhythmic. Miss Sarah leaned closer instinctively to hear the words; they escaped her at first, then echoed clearer:

"Remember how when first we met we stood,
Stung with immortal recollections,
O fact, immured beside a fiery sea
That leaned down at dead midnight to be kissed!
O beauty folded up in forests old,
Thou wast the lovely quest of Arthur's knights;
Thy armour glimmered in a gloom of green.
Did I not sing to thee in Babylon?
Or did we set a sail in Carthage bay?
Were thine eyes strange? Did I not know thy voice?
All ghostly grew the sun, unreal the air
Then when we kissed."

The last word quivered sentient on the air, and Miss Sarah trembled with a strange fear of it. Her fingers found the rough bark of the tree and clung; she waited, hungered, for the rest, but young Lockwood's voice broke from the beat of verse into uneven words:

"Paola, my beautiful, it is our story."

"It is the story of Paola and Francesca," said the girl dreamily.

"Paola and Francesca—Paola and Francis—what does it matter? 'Were thine eyes strange? Did I not know thy voice?'"

Miss Sarah, dizzied and enwrapt by she knew not what roseate mist, saw the white grace of Paola waver and lean to the shadow and heard a few moments of magical silence, the whisper, tender, exultant:

"And in the book they read no more that day."

Miss Sarah felt her way back to the path with unnecessary care. If her light footsteps had been the crash of brasses they would not have reached the two by the Black Prince, but Miss Sarah did not know it. She hurried along between the roses, catching her breath in little gasps as she went, and the wraiths of lost years swarmed around her, stinging her to wild, indefinite regret. She passed through the moonlight and up the steps, through the open window, and caught up her neglected knitting with a pathetic desire for things tangible and commonplace. She opened the volume of Felicia Hemans at the purple bookmark, but without knowledge of a line.

"I never knew what it was like!" she said pitifully to herself. "I wish I had known." The magic of the moonlit garden swept over her again, and the music of the lover's verse murmured in her ears. Miss Sarah trembled with a vague, unhappy longing for the things that she had never known—the things that were the inheritance of Paola, her sister, yet had never been hers.

Beyond the window the garden lay vast and wonderful beneath the moon, to her a land where life ran in strange currents between banks of enchanted blossoms.

Suddenly and without warning a tear slipped down Miss Sarah's cheek and splashed upon the purple bookmark. Another followed it and yet another; then Miss Sarah drew herself together and shut between the leaves of Felicia Hemans poems her one belated vision of romance. 'And in the book they read no more that day," she said to herself, with a sad little sigh. Then she took up her knitting again to wait for Paola.

A Roland For His Oliver.

He was very practical, and in order to have everything fair and square beforehand he said:

"You know, darling, I promised my mother that my wife should be a good housekeeper and a domestic woman. Can you make good bread? That is the fundamental principle of all housekeeping."

"Yes; I went into a bakery and learned how to make all kinds of bread." She added under her breath, "Maybe."

"And can you do your own dressmaking? I am comparatively a poor man, love, and dressmakers' bills would soon bankrupt me."

"Yes," she said frankly, "I can make everything I wear, especially bonnets."

"You are a jewel!" he cried, with enthusiasm. "Come to my arms!"

"Wait a minute; there's no hurry," she said coolly. "It's my turn to ask a few questions. Can you carry up coal and light the fire of a morning?"

"Why, my love, the servant would do that."

"Can you make your coat, trousers and other wearing apparel?"

"But that isn't to the purpose."

"Can you build a house, scrub floors, beat carpets, sweep chimneys"—

"I am not a professional."

"Neither am I. It has taken most of my life to acquire the education and accomplishments that attach you to me. But as soon as I have learned all the professions you speak of I will send you my card. Au revoir!" And she swept away.—London Tit-Bits.

FROM THE PREFACE

"In every situation General Lee was a great, a dominant figure. The character of Lee has been somewhat lost sight of in the study of his career, but it fairly glows with all that is high and noble and true. The Bayard of the South exhibits the chacteristics of the Christian gentleman to the full. His is a personality to be studied, to be followed, to be loved. In his greatness and in his simplicity he is an enduring inspiration to true manhood for all America—the world even."

The Patriots

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY
Author of "The Southerners," etc.

A War-time story in all its aspects. It opens with a chapter in the life of Lee, woven around the hour in which he decided to take up arms for Virginia and the Southland.

There is a dual love story—a vein of the most tender and sweetest sentiment running through the pages.
