Belfast 20. Nov. 1810

Dear Sir

I am happy to have my letters to Mr Washington Maxwell, & Jack Dunkin, I not having got any as yet of your welfare, & that you & Mrs B. like the Country, I am heated in, this that you have been wrote me, but, however, when you get all things to your mind I hope you will not, forget to write me. my business is doing as well as I can expect, I am obliged to keep a Clerk constant. Trade is rather getting better here now. Hugh Cameron might do better there he at present does: but however. I think in some time he will come round — John May well desires me to let you know that the things you propose for him deserve you today, & he wd not wish to come out on your terms, but by this time twelve months he thinks he will be able, to pay his own passage &c & then shall be happy to serve you John Dunkin, will be very happy, to go, to see you, he at present is not overly well situated, in his place — The first Spring vessel that goes over, you may expect him, he has wrote him ever since you left this place —

He sends his kind complaments to your Mrs Bennie & to rest of the family, he is vexed that Stephen does not write well, my little orphan nephew in John Maxwells letter that you could read he can write he writes pack with his crooks
