Dear Uncle

You cannot conceive what pleasure we all received by the last letters from America. My Father received one from you, in which you mentioned a wish to hear from me, do not impute it to want of affection that I did not write to you before this, but never being accustomed to carry on a correspondence with any of my friends, I felt myself unequal to the task. O Dear Uncle, it gives us all extreme pleasure to hear that you are so happily situated, but we still indulge a wish that we shall again see each other in a few years. I wrote once to Worthy, but have never received a letter from him, I expect that he will shortly write to me now, as he will have frequent opportunities of doing so. My Father is not now a hearer of Mr. Acheson's, having changed to Doctor Bruce, but as our family & his visit, I have frequent opportunities of seeing him, & he always makes very affectionate enquiries concerning you. He is now living in the Country,

Mr Bienvie
