An Amazing Number of Conveniences Can Be Designed to Fit Nooks and Corners

Houses today, done in the most modern manner, may have as many built-in features as a ship's cabin, practical and convenient for everyday use. New ideas in interior design contemplate more and more built-in furnishings in the home. Grandmother, and that wall all. She didn't think of built-in beds, built-in electric stoves and any of the one hundred and one built-in gadgets thot the modern woman may enjoy and which at the same time conserve time, space and money.

All built-in furniture is considered immovable under terms of the National Housing Act and loans up to $2,000 can be made for the sole purpose of constructing built-in household equipment, if such is desirable.

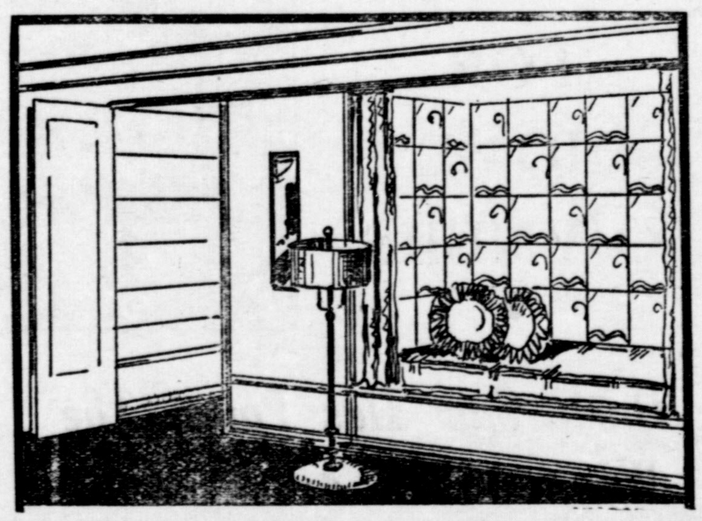

Certain built-in fitments are much more practical than time-honored relics, and may be achieved with a minimum of labor and expense, plenty of planning and lots of paint in the hands of an artistic interior designer.

Living rooms can be made to yield more space for living by a variety of built-in features. Bookcases may sink right into the wall, taking up no floor space, and may be so placed that they will be both ornamental and useful. In the same room the fireplace may be an electric one and recede into the wall, as do the bookcases. An all purpose desk with drawers may be built in one corner or elsewhere as the space lends itself, and a decorative cabinet may be added. In the modern manner, and surprisingly inexpensively, almost all the living room fitments can be built in. Rooms so designed are particularly appealing to the persons who must live in small quarters, because they release so much space and yet offer all needed equipment for putting things away.

A window seat may complete this practical corner and the cabinet-maker may even construct one of those novel chairs with a small tea table pulling out magically from somewhere under one chair-arm.

It is practically impossible today to plan a modernized home without a variety of the built-in features that can be easily and economically constructed.
