~~are~~ without allowing the latter to have too great a preponderance — Worthy, however, has no occasion to rest his independence on the Law — the plough is a much easier, and, though not so dazzling, is certainly equally as honourable a profession — I thank you for your kind invitation; which I do not despair of having it at some time or other in my power to accept; but when I do visit the country, the pleasure I receive there is always mingled with regret. I have had excellent success in my History of England, published about two months ago, and am now laying my hand on a History of the United States, in which I have made considerable progress — Mrs G. joins with myself in kind regards to Mrs Bonnie, Miss B. and all your good family — please remember me to your Brother and to Worthy —

Yours Sincerely

Wm Grimshaw
