WASHINGTON LETTER

From Our Regular Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19, 1882.

"Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching," and other war time songs are heard on all sides, as some visiting or local post of the G. A. R. marches past, the band playing and banners waving. The 26th National Encampment is a success of colossal proportions, both in point of attendance, which far exceeds that of any previous encampment and which will probably never be so great at any similar event in the future, and of enthusiastic welcome to the veterans, a welcome shown not only by the elaborate snd beautiful decorations of streets and residences but by the faces of the people. Those who have slandered Washington by saying that her people were selfish and unpatriotic should forever hang their heads in shame. Why even babies in the arms of their nurses crow patriotically and wave tiny flags, along the streets. and it is next to impossible to find a man, woman or child who does not carry somewhere on their person our country's flags.

The first prominent feature of the encampment was the dedication of Grand Army Place this afternoon The ceremonies were preceded by a brilliant street parade, made up of United States regular troops—artillery, cavalry and infantry—sailors, marines, the entire National Guards of the Distrlct of Columbia, and the department of the Potomac G. A. R., which was greatly enjoyed by the visiting veterans who were conspicuous in the crowds that packed the sides of the line of march. The dedicatory ceremonies were successfully carried out according to the original program, Vice President Morton having very kindly agreed to take the President's place. The scene will not so be forgotten by those who witnessed it.

Away in the back ground, looking to the southwest, the yellow-pillared portico of the historic Arlington Mansion presents a strong contrast to the green foliage by which it is surrounded, and none who looked forget that it is also surrounded by the remains of thousands of comrades who fought by the sides of the veterns to-day assembled in a grand re-union—who can say that the spirits of the veterans buried at Arlington are not also holding a re-union this week? Looking directly south the slender grey shaft of the Washington Monument, extending five hundred and fifty-five feet skyward challenge's the admiration of the beholder, while to the east looms up the immense white dome of the Capitol, unsurpassed in grandeur and artistic symmetry by any public building on earth. Within a stone's throw stands a miniature Washington Monument, probably a hundred feet high, wrapped from its base to its summit, from which extends a flag pole proudly supporting "old glory", in red, white and blue, and a beautiful model of the good ship Kearsage, full size and full rigged, and partly manned by survivors of the crew which took part in its memorable engagement with the privateer Alabama, which it sank, as you probably remember. Directly north stands the White House, which reminds the vets of the trouble, caused by Mrs. Harrison's sickness, that has prevented the President joining his comrades, as he had arranged to do, and just west of the Executive Mansion stands the handsomest public edifice in Washington—the new State War and Navy Department building. Could a more appropriate spot have been chosen for the re-union grounds, or one where more that is dear to the old soldiers heart could have been seen at a glance?

This encampment is the first time that one place for holding all the reunions, corps, division, brigade and regimental, has been selected and the visitors are loud in their praise of the arrangement by which they can so easily meet with those who served with them in the war.

The ladies' reception held in the rotunda of the Capital tonight, which was conceived by Mrs. John A. Logan, was one of the largest, most brillant and at the same time enjoyable affairs of the kind ever held in Washington, where public receptions are common events. The arrangements were so perfect that thousands passed through the rotunda, from East to West, without accident of any kind, although there was more squeezing at times than was altogether comfortable.

The regret is general that the President is not in Washington to take part in the pleasures of the week, which he has been anticipating ever since Washington was selected as the place for holding this years encampment, and everybody has a word of sympathy for him and for Mrs. Harrison, and expresses the wish that she may soon recover.

Vice President Morton was not a soldier, but he has made himself very solid with the soliders by his promptness in coming here and volunteering to take the President's place in the programme for encampment week.

EDITORIAL LETTER.

In our last we give a brief description of what our party saw in Boston. In this we propose to give a brief account of our journey to Newport and Portland and perhaps a portion of our trip to the White Mountains.

Before entering on this however, we propose to give a brief account of a very pleasant transaction which took place in our party before leaving Boston. The members of the Peninsula Press Association felt that the chairman of the Executive committee, Mr. H. C. Carpenter, deserved some recognition from the association, more than mere expressions of thanks, for his untireing zeal in behalf of the association in securing transportation and making all the necessary arrangements for these enjoyable annual excursions. Consequently a committee was appointed to take the matter in hand and raise sufficient funds by contributions from the members to procure a suitable testimonial for Mr. Carpenter. The committee was entirely successful and a beautiful watch chain, bearing the emblems of a Knight Templar, of which order he is an honored member, was procured and suitably engraved. Notice was given Mr. Carpenter that the Association requested his presence in the parlor of the hotel. Mr. Carpenter promptly responded to the call, and on the assembling of the entire party, Rev. W. W. Wilson, in behalf of the assoctiation, in a few appropriate remarks presented the charm to Mr. Carpenter. Mr. C. was very much surprised, as the matter had been kept a secret from him, but in a neat speech he thanked the members, assuring them that he prized highly this memento and that he should cherish it, even holding in kind remembrance the donors.

While in Boston Mr. Carpenter one morning informed our company that the Old Coloney Railroad company had placed a car at the parties disposal in which the entire party should be taken to Newport and return free of expense if they so desired. Most of the party availed themselves of this opportunity to visit this justly celebrated sea-side resort. The distance is about eighty miles and the route is one of the most disirable ones. The management of this road is the best, and the Old Colony Railroad is known far and wide being noted for its magnificent equipment and the splendid accommodations it gives its passengers.

Our party enjoyed the trip very much. Passing as we did through those great manufacturing cities many of our party who were not accostumed to seeing these were struck with the immensity of some of these establishments. Especially was this the case at Falls River. It seemed to us that this city with its hundreds of cotton mills could manufacturer enough calico to almost supply the world and that their output goes a long way in that direction is quite evident as their prints it is said are found in almost every market in the world. It would appear that the workman in this city live at home if one were to judge from the pleasant looking homes one sees dotting this, one of the largest manufacturing town in the country.

We passed through another large manufecturing town, Wilmantic, where is manufactured much of the spool cotton used in this country. But it would be nseless for us to try to enumerate all of the manufacturing towns in this aection. We ean only say that it seemed as though the entire New England states were one teeming mass of manufactories and the employees, judging from outward appearances, were prosperous and huppy.

Our stay in Newport was so short that we could only give it a passing view but we saw most of the magnificient cottages and private dwellings of the wealthy residents, for which this "city by the sea" is noted. We visited the bathing grounds and saw the hundreds of bathers enjoying themselves in the surf of old ocean and if we are capable of judging, the bathing at this noted resort must be very fine as the surf seems to come in, in one continuous roll and the timerous as well as the more venturesome, it would seem to us, could find bathing to suit them, for it one ventured well out the breakers were formidable enough for the most courageous bather of either sex.

Returning from Newport our party had one more day in Boston which was fully occupied in seeing the sights of this remarkable city.

On Monday evening we took up the line of march for the wharf of the Boston and Portland steamers which we were going to take for Portland, and as the distance was not far we walked to the electric road where we could take the cars direct for the wharf. As we passed a crowd on one of the corners they made an opening to let the Salvation Army pass, as they called us. As some of the more sanctimonious ones of our crowd were in the lead we were given the right of way, as the crowd evidently did not want us to stop for services at that time.

Arrivtng at the wharf we were soon on board the steamer "Tremont" and on our way to Portland. That some of our party were not favorably impressed with the beauties of old ocean was soon apparent from the urgent demand made for chewing gum and other sure preventives against sea-sickness. While a few of our party suffered a little from the nausea incident to ocean travel most of the company enjoyed the trip on the ocean, the only drawback being that the boat was somewhat crowded. Our party arrived in Portland early in the morning and soon repaired to the depot of the Maine Central Railroad which line was to take the party to Fabyan in the White Mountains.

Owing to the length of this letter we shall be compelled to give our trip to this famous resort in another letter.

Yours,

F. C. R.
