DENTON, MARYLAND:

THURSDAY MORNING:::::::::March 31, 1870.

The Registration Law.

With very slight modifications, it is probable the Registration law will be continued —expensive advertising and all. This law seems to be an especial favorite with its new-made friends, and they seem loth to sacrifice it upon the altar of retrenchment.

The Interest Bill.

The House of Delegates, by a vote 88 to 27, defeated the bill allowing an increase in the rate of interest in cases of special contract. The legal rate of interest will, therefore, continue as formerly—6 per cent. In view of the cramped financial condition of many of our people and the scarcity of money, this action of the Legislature is not only unwise but impolitic. Money always seeks the best investments; and as these are to be had elsewhere, the capital of our State will naturally seek other fields than our own.

The School Law.

At last the Legislature has taken action upon the School law, though it is evident the main features of the law will remain unchanged. One change is that the selection of School Commissioners is taken away from the people and vested in the Judges of the Circuit Courts. Why this change is made is not stated, nor are we able to divine the reason, but it does seem to us that the people of the several counties are as competent to make their own selections, and as impartially, too, as are the Judges of the Courts.

That War of Races.

The Democrats have for a long time been predicting a war of races. But the war hasn't come, and the two races are getting along more and more harmoniously together. A certain class of Democratic politicians, however, are determined this harmony shall exist no longer, and week after week their newspapers teem with appeals to white men to organize a white man's party—that is, to array the whites and blacks in opposition to each other, hoping thus to bring on that "war of races." But Republican white men are not to be soft-sawdered in any such a manner. They are used to the trick of these wily Democrats, and are thoroughly impressed with the belief that "distance lends enchantment to the view."

Their Last Card.

The last card of Democratic politicians is to organize a White Man's party, and thus hang on to the power which it now delights them so to abuse. They are aware that the white vote of this county is about eighteen hundred, while the colored vote is only about eight hundred, and that if they can induce the white men to abandon old party associations the triumph will be complete. But will the white people consent to sunder old party ties, and to embark with a set of adventurers on unknown political seas? Will the Republicans who, last year, voted for McKellip, Jump and the remainder of their ticket, consent to dissolve their organization because help has come in the person of the colored man to assist in expelling from power the vampires who have sucked the last dollar out of the treasury, piled up the taxes and reared an adamantine wall to oppose the car of State progress? Will they desert the old standard now that the battle has been fought and the victory has been won? We cannot for a moment entertain such a belief. Negro suffrage was as much of an accomplished fact last fall as it now is, and we are no nearer a social equality now than we were then. It has never been denied that the enfranchisement of the colored people would bring about political equality; on the contrary this doctrine has been promulgated far and wide. But social equality and political equality are entirely different in their nature. The one is an association upon equal footing in families, the other is nothing more than equality before the law—the right to sue and be sued, the right of protection and the right to enforce that protection by the selection of those who are to rule over us. Social equality is an absurdity—an impossibility—and is even more than could be enforced by the iron laws of Draco. No act of a State Legislature could legislate an equality between families without the consent of those families. Custom, however, might go beyond all law and establish an equality, but the people themselves are the architects of custom, and so long as they decree against social equality so long would all laws attempting to enforce it remain a dead letter upon the statute books.

Then, where is the need of a White Man's party? It can accomplish nothing. The colored people would still vote, and the imagined pollution and debasement would be as great as ever. The whole move is an effort on the part of Democratic politicians to retain power, as the name indicates. They are the same men who opposed the disenthralment of the colored man from the bonds of slavery, have been his inveterate enemy ever since, and now, finding that their imprecations are about to recoil on their own heads by the advancement of the colored man, they cry out for a White Man's party, hoping thus to delude the ignorant and unwary.—They see no hope of securing even the smallest portion of the colored vote, and hence they must resort to new measures. It is a desperate game, but will most signally fail. Therefore, Republicans, be firm. Stand fast to your old principles. Your old enemy is now nearly prostrate, and next fall will witness the final crash. In your hour of triumph remember your past vicissitudes, and resolve that Democracy, once subdued, shall remain subdued forever.
