Dignity of Manual Labor.

It is a prevalent idea among the youth of the present day, that those who devote their time and energies to the various manual pursuits which in this country are so numerous, must of necessity resign certain benefits which all intellectual and moral beings crave as conducive to their happiness and elevation. As so large a proportion of mankind are necessarily engaged in these occupations, if it can be proved that they are therefore deprived of such advantages, it would follow that Providence has been unequal and partial in the distribution of blessings. But a thorough investigation of the subject will prove how erroneous is such a theory, and how fatally mistaken are people who crowd into the overflowing avenues of mercantile or professional life, in the hope of occupying a superior social position and enjoying greater advantages, rather than follow some of the many mechanical pursuits standing ready to welcome them, and for which nature may have thoroughly fitted them.

Physical labor is not, in itself, as some maintain, unfavorable to mental improvement. Indeed, its routine is such as, in most cases, to leave the mind and thoughts free to pursue any desired path. Some of the most vigorous thinkers, both of ancient and modern times, have been found among the mechanics, artisans and laborers of the world. Some of those now most conspicuous in the literary and political world, acquired and developed most of their mental power while engaged in various manual occupations; while large numbers of those now pursuing similar avocations, possess an amount of sterling sense and practical wisdom, that belongs to none who affect superciliously to look down with contempt upon noble industry.

In this class, also, we not unfrequently witness the loftiest moral traits, and the most zealous and unwearied efforts for the improvement and happiness of mankind.—An English shoemaker of the name of John Pounds, who performed during nearly eighty years as large an amount of the humblest task work as, perhaps, ever fell to the lot of man, yet contrived to rescue from ruin hundreds of neglected children, and by wisely adapting suitable means to noble ends, won for himself a worthy name among the philanthropists of the world. His is by no means an exceptional case, but a type of many, even among those who live a life of incessant toil. In our own land, however, it is admitted by all, that neither Providence nor the welfare of society demands that any portion of the race should live such a life.—Those of our people who are really overworked, are found rather among those who labor with the brain than with the hands, and the pressure and anxiety of commercial life bring far more victims to ruined constitutions and early graves than any excess of manual labor among our industrial classes. The Old World has abundantly proved the evils of unremitting toil; while every year of our national existence shows more and more conclusively that a moderate quota of labor, affording space for the culture of the higher traits of mind and character, is the best thing to produce strong and vigorous manhood; the best course to attain a healthful, physical and mental nature; the surest ladder by which to climb to a true and well-balanced prosperity.

If we should continue to improve upon our present state, as we have upon the past, it must be by uniting more closely than ever in every individual, the thinking and the working powers. Ruskin says: "It is only by labor that thought can be made healthy, and only by thought that labor can be made happy." When society conforms perfectly to the indications of Providence, and governs herself by its laws, all occupations will be considered liberal professions, the essential work of the world will be performed without any degrading associations, and every man will be honored, not according to the nature of his calling, but in proportion to the excellence of his achievement.—Ledger.

CONCEITED PEOPLE.—Minerva threw away the flute, when she found that it puffed up her cheeks; but if we cast away the flute now-a-days, it is that we may take a larger instrument of puffing, by becoming our own trumpeters. Empty minds are the most prone to soar above their proper sphere, like paper kites, which are kept aloft by their own lightness; while those that are better stored are prone to humility, like heavily laden vessels, of which we see the less the more richly and deeply they are freighted.—The corn bends itself downwards when its ears are filled, but when the heads of the conceited are filled with self-adulation, they only lift them up higher. Perhaps it is a benevolent provision of Providence that we should possess in fancy these good qualities which are held from us in reality; for if we did not occasionally think well of ourselves we should be more apt to think ill of others. It must be confessed that the conceited and the vain have a light and pleasant duty to perform, since they have but one to please, and in that object they seldom fail. Self-love, moreover, is the only love not liable to the pangs of jealousy. Pity! that a quick perception of our own deserts generally blinds us to the merits of others; that we should see more than all the world in the former instance, and less in the latter! In one respect, conceited people show a degree of discernment for which they deserve credit—they soon become tired of their own company.

BE GOOD NATURED.—While you gaze into the face of a good-natured, noble-hearted man or woman, it is not the shape of the features that you see, nor yet the tint of the cheek, the hue of thelips, or the brilliance of the eyes; you see the nameless something which animates all these, and leaves for your instincts a sense of grateful fascination. You see an indescribable embodiment of heartfelt goodness within, which wins your regards in spite of external appearances. Cultivate good nature, therefore. It is better than "apples of gold set in silver," for gold will take to itself wings and fly away; silver will tarnish in time, and both, when abundant, lose their comparative value; but good nature never deteriorates in worth—never abandons its possessor to the mental poverty of the malicious—never looses its hold upon the esteem of the world. It is always in fashion and always in season. Everybody admires it. Everybody prases it. Everybody is in love with it. It never grows stale. It costs little to acquire and nothing to keep. Yet it is beyond diamonds in its worth to its owners, and can neither be stolen nor lost, however neglected. Surely this a jewel that merits a search, and when found, merits protection.

AN intelligent gentleman from Germany on his first visit to an American church, had a contribution box with a hole in the top presented to him, and whispered to the collector. "I don't get mein babers unt, can't vote."

No person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell.

☞ $100 will be given for an incurable case, provided the bones are not destroyed by mineral poisons or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, and Gout, Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores: cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins: cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

PIN, TAPE, and other WORMS, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed.

In Billious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers these Bitters have no equal. For full directions read carefully the circular around each bottle, printed in four languages—English, German, French and Spanish.
