DENTON, MARYLAND:

THURSDAY MORNING:::::::::June 16, 1870.

Both houses of Congress have passed an act providing for an Assistant Treasurer of the United Sates in Baltimore.

The House of Representatives, after a long discussion, has fixed the amount of exemption under the revenue laws at $2000, and the rate at 3 percent. It is thought teh Senate will concur.

The "Oyster war" has broken out again between this State and Virginia, the authorities of the latter State having arrested a number of Maryland oystermen last week and confined them in jail at Drummondtown.

President Grant sent a message to Congresa on Monday relating to Cuban affairs. He thinks that the disturbances do not amount to a war in an international point of view; that the Spanish have made no progress in subduing the insurrection, and, after commenting on their cruelties, states that the neutrality observed by this Government is in conformity with the examples of its predecessors.

Delaware, it seems, is not the only State where the use of the lash is legalized as punishment for crime. The local laws for some of the counties in our own State provide for tho punishment of paupers by "lashing" them, the difference between them being only in the number of lashes to be given and who may recommend the punishment. The counties in which this law is operative are, Anne Arundle, Howard, Baltimore, Charles, Frederick, Prince George's, St. Mary's, Wicomico, Worcester, Calvert, Cecil, Kent, Queen Anne's, Dorchester, Somerset, Harford Montgomery and Talbot—seventeen out of the twenty-two counties in the State. The repeal of these laws should be the first act of the next Legislature.

The occasion of the decorating of the graves of the Confederate dead in Baltimore last week was availed of to pay especial homage to the felon, J. Wilkes Booth. Flowers were scattered in profusion upon his grave, and the silent tear drop fell from many a sympathizing heart as they stood around and lamented the just deserts of his crime. Assuredly the Democratic sentiment of our State is prostituted to ignoble purposes. We knew it was perverse and depraved, but was not prepared to believe it was sunken so low in infamy as to pay tribute to the memory of the cowardly murderer of a chief magistrate of the nation. But, disguise it as you will the gossamer mantle which vails its hypocrisy is sometimes parted, and we behold its real intents, its sympathies and arhent desires.

The Cecil Whig may rest assured that we have not been deceived in relation to the formation of that Central Committee. We do not propose to call on the State Central Committee, or its officers, for information concerning it, because we have no reason to believe that either know anything about it—nor have we ever said they did. Our information came from a citizen of another county, who was, only a short time before, in Baltimore, and, as we understood, in conversation with some of the persons who originated the idea of forming the Committee. Moreover, he is as truthful as any man in Cecil county, not excepting the editor of the Whig.

The Whig need not console itself with the belief that there has been any "double-dealing game" going on here, and which it has rebuked. We have a personal knowledge that that charge is untrue. If there is any "gulling" going on, it exists only on the part of Cecil, for nowhere else in the district have we heard of any movement relating to the Congressional canvass. So far as this county is concerned, we know that no electioneering has been carried on, and the subject is rarely ever mentioned. Can the Whig say this of Cecil truthfully? Will it deny that the ball has long since been put in motion in Baltimore, and elsewhere, by which the nomination was to be given to Cecil county? Have not prominent politicians in other districts been engaged to aid in this movement?—And we do not wish to be understood as complaining because such has been done, for this is a prerogative accorded to every county. We only find fault because the Whig seeks to attract attention from what it and its friends are doing in the interests of Cecil county by laying to our charge things that never had an existence in this county. We have only been trying, in this controversy, to ward off the flings and inuendoes of the Whig, and to administer to it a little rebuke for its unjustifiable assaults upon good and true Republicans—as good as the editor of the Whig, or any native or foreign-born resident of Cecil county. We affirm, most positively, that all we have said on this subject has been in the interest, not of any individual, but of the party whose principles we uphold, and we will submit all the articles on both sides to the judgment of any fair-minded person who shall be the judge whether the Whig or the Union has best fulfilled this purpose.

The Whig need not expect to salve over its unjustifiable assault on the "politicians of Caroline" by the assurance that we are not included. Its attack was, at first, against the county indiscriminately, and for the purpose of clawing out of that it vents its spleen upon a gentleman (we all know whom) who, considering the past, had a right to expect better treatment at the hands of the editor of the Whig. This assault of the Whig is in every sense unjustifiable, and its insinuations untrue, and the Whig should be ashamed of it.

The last Spike has been driven in the new Wimington & Reading R. R., the road is nearly ballasted and ready for the cars and will be thrown open to travel in a few days. The Wilmington Board of Trade celebrates the consummation of the work to-day by an excursion over the road.

We have heretofore briefly adverted to the advantages which will ensue to the Peninsula by the construction of this road; its completion and operation will show how far we were right in our prophesies. We imagine it will even exceed our most sanguine expectation. It opens up a country where the products of our clime cannot be successfully cultivated, and is the connecting link between the Peninsula and the great West. It throws open new markets, brings us into closer business communion with other cities, and by the relation it bears to our Peninsular railroad system infuses new life and energy into every part of the Peninsula. The coal fields of Pennsylvania are within easy access to our doors, while immense iron manufactories lie along and at the terminus of this new road, thus enabling us to deal direct with the manufacturers. With such advantages as these spread out before us, who will controvert the future usefulness of the road in developing the resources of our beautiful Peninsula? It benefits not only Wilmington city but the entire Peninsula, and is one more cord which binds in sympathetic harmony a section whose interests and natural boundaries are identical, but which is separted by the false idea of State pride and ancient custom.

The Delaware State Convention, which assembled at Dover on Thursday last, nominated Thomas B. Coursey, of Kent county, for Governor,and Joshua T. Heald, of Wilmington, for Congress. In the selection of these gentlemen the Republicans of Delaware have done well, for they are universally popular—men of talent and eminently qualified to fill the positions for which they have been nominated. With a carefnl canvass, a vigorous effort and a full determination to win, the Republicans of Delaware will be able to overthrow the vampires who are sucking the life's blood out of the State, depleting the treasury, piling up the taxes and crippling the energies of the people. Let them, then, go to work in earnest, and strain every nerve to place Coursey in the gubernatorial chair. If they fail in this canvass, the State is hopelessly lost and the family misrule continued for an indefinite period.

Ohio Democrats by resolution condemn the income tax, while the Representatives of Democracy in Congress vote against its reduction. This exhibits the usual consistency between the words and the acts of the party.

OUR BOOK TABLE.

Peach Culture. By J. Alexander Fulton. Illustrated. New York: Orange Judd & Co., 1870.

Upon the receipt of the above book we handed it over to Mr. J. W. Kerr, a practical nurseryman, with the request that he examine it and comment upon its merits and demerits.—The following are his remarks:

CHOPTANK NURSERIES,
DENTON, MD., June 9th, 1870.

Editor American Union:—

I have examined with considerable care and interest the work on "Peach Culture," which you kindly submitted to me a few days back, and, in complicity with your request, will give you my opinion regarding its merits. Book writing, it seems, is rapidly on the increase in our land of intelligence and improvement.—Works are published, or are being published, upon every conceivable subject, some of much merit, many of little. Every newspaper in the land has, I suppose, more or less patronage from Publishing Companies, soliciting applications from the idle and delicate for agencies to sell "the best book out," yet with all this multiplicity of works, literary and scientific instructive (?) it is plainly evident that, while this branch of agriculture is one of much importance in many sections, there is quite a deficiency of knowledge respecting it for to properly and successfully conduct it. There was, therefore not only ample room, but actual necessity, for general instruction upon this "field of labor." And I believe that the labors of Mr. Fulton, in preparing this book, will be productive of good and profit to many who are already engaged, and many others about to engage, in growing peaches for market.—While I do not fully endorse all his plans for the practical operations of propagating the trees in the nursery, I still think them quite an improvement over many that I have recently really seen in practice. I will advert to a few points in this connexion, not in a spirit of criticism, but only to illustrate, to a small degree, differences of opinion. The author says he "prefers having the rows in a peach nursery to run north and south." Here we disagree.—The sledge, or marker, as figured in this book, for laying-off the rows preparatory to planting is considerably behind the trade. In speaking of cutting buds for budding, his instructions are, "under ordinary circumstances, no more than can be used in half a day should be cut off. They are injured by being kept long."—I experience no difficulty in keeping buds, in good condition two, and even three weeks after being cut from the trees. Next, I do not think that what is termed an expert, skilled, or good hand, by the book, performs enough of labor to warrant so enviable a title. 2000 buds, or 2.500, is not sufficient to keep an expert employed a day. Neither do I think 5000 trees topped by a "good hand" is enough to warrant praises. I merely allude to a few little points of difference, as they recur to my memory, and through fear of intruding upon your space, will only cite one or two more respecting orchards. "A cove or valley," says the book, "is preferable for an orchard." I would prefer an elevation, or land adjacent to a deep stream, or body of water. Again, "12 or 15 inches" is much deeper than I would dig a hole for a one year old peach tree. It is given as the belief of the Author, that "cutting-in invigorates and prolongs the life of the tree." Here we seriously differ; and if a leisure hour presents itself, I may, perhaps, ask permission to give to your readers my reasons for thinking differently upon this old, but ill-founded theory. There are many other points in which I disagree with Mr. Fulton, but doubtless the enumeration of them here would be uninteresting to a large majority of your readers. In conclusion, I am pleased to say, that the exposition given to the dishonest trickery of many commission merchants in our large cities, and its just condemnation by this book, separate and apart from the many other instructive hints and instructions it contains, renders it well worth the price and a careful perusal.

Very respectfully, &c.

J. W. Kerr.

Death of Chas. Dickens.

Dickens, the novelist, is dead, having breathed his last on Wednesday of last week. The following are the circumstances of his death:

He was entertaining a party at dinner, at his residence at Gad's Hill, on Wednesday, when he was suddenly seized with alarming symptoms of illness, depriving him of speech and volition, and he was thought to be dying. He was immediately conveyed to his chamber, and medical assistance was rapidly summoned. Upon the arrival of the physician, he was pronounced to be under the influence of a formidable stroke of apoplexy.—Immediate remedies were prescribed and everything done to alleviate his sufferings, but it was all useless, as the great novelist still remained in a comatose state, from which it was impossible to rouse him.

A consultation of physicians failed to develop a remedy for this unfortunate coma. Mr. Dickens still lay in that dangerous state of insensibility, and from the time of the attack until six o'clock Thursday evening he lay motionless, betraying no signs of life.

The physicians, alarmed at his condition at six o'clock examined him to detect signs of breathing, but the last flickering spark of life had expired, and shortly after six o'clock the great novelist was pronounced dead, having given no signs of life, and remaining almost utterly insensible until the hour of his death.
