DENTON, MARYLAND.

THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 18, 1885

JUST at present the country is bestowing its abuses on the statesmen, and its praise on the base ball player.

THE list of gifts presented to General Grant, and by him presented to the government, eloquently shows the esteem and honor felt for the old hero by the civilized world.

GEN. GRANT left New York on Tuesday for the mountains, accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Sartoris, Colonel Fred and his wife, Jesse Grant and wife, and Dr. Douglas. When Dr. Douglas called on Tuesday evening he found the patient uneasy and nervous.

THE peach may now be said to have passed the several successive stages of danger in bloom and development of germ, and to have escaped all its enemies. It is gratifying to know that while our native orchards are blighted the crop on the Delaware peninsula, our chief source of supply, promises to be unprecedented, even exceeding the yield of 1875 which was the largest ever known. Reports carefully gathered from the entire peninsula peach belt show the fruit alive and growing nicely throughout the entire region. Usually disaster befalls the trees in either the upper or lower portion of the district, but this year every section promises a large and unusual yield, which enthusiastic estimates place as high as 9,000,000 baskets. Peaches will be cheap anyway.

George Taggart Captured.

The Centreville Observer of Tuesday says: "George Taggart, who escaped from jail in this place a short time since, was captured yesterday morning by Mr. T. B. Curry, of Caroline county. Mr. Curry received information on Sunday that the whereabouts of Taggart were known, and he immediately procured the services of four men and proceeded to the place where Taggart was secreted. He ascertained that Taggart was in the house of a man named Joseph Cornish, residing between Greensborough and Denton on the east side of the Choptank river. The party proceeded to the house of Cornish at about three o'clock in the morning. Cornish being called opened the door and Mr. Curry and another man went into the house and found Taggart asleep. He was aroused and taken prisoner, but not without resistance. He was brought to town yesterday morning and locked up. Sheriff Sudler says he will keep him this time, and immediately had leg irons rivited on him.

In conversation with Taggart at the jail it was ascertained that he went direct from the jail here on the night of his delivery to the Kent county forest, and from there he roamed around in the woods in different parts of the county until he was captured. He says he has not seen Wright, the colored man, since the night of their escape, but this is evidently not true, as he told a gentleman he had seen him on Thursday last. He seems in good spirits and jokes about his escape and capture. He expresses the belief that he was betrayed, and feels confident that had he not been he would not have been captured."

Bribery at Elections.

A number of Eastern Shore cotemporaries are excitedly discussing the extent to which bribery at elections prevails in that prosperous and beautiful section of the country. The charge as originally made applied only to Caroline county, but the general imputation has extended to other counties, and most of the newspapers on the Shore are now engaged in denying or affirming that the evil exists to the extent alleged, either in their own county or any of the others.

As far as our information goes, there is no reason why the inhabitants of the Eastern Shore should bow their heads with shame because of the publicity which has been given to this charge. Bribery at elections is most reprehensible, but it prevails so universally that exhibitions of it awaken but little reproach or indignation among the people. This is not a pleasant reflection, but it is a true one, and it is the most striking evidence of the disregard in which the right of suffrage is held by many citizens of the United States. The great and everywhere apparent corruption in American politics is due not less to the enforcement of the spoils system than to the magnitude of the influence of money in popular elections. In certain sections of the country there is less bribery than in others, but it may be safely asserted that there is no election district within the limits of the United States where there are not men who think so little of the sanctity of the ballot that they boldly offer their votes for sale, and other men so blind or indifferent to the heinousness of their crime that they buy these votes like chattels offered in open market.

For the extent of this evil politicians of both parties are equally responsible, and the buying of a majority in a given district is regarded as a proper and legitimate transaction. The shamelessness with which immense corruption funds are raised is an evidence of the apathy of the public. A man who contemplates stealing his neighbor's chickens waits for a dark night and a convenient opportunity to accomplish his end, but the men who contemplate polluting the ballot-box and striking a blow at the fundamental principle of the nation make no secret of their intention and shamelessly proceed to carry out their plans without fear of any sort except that of being outbid by the other side.

Laws without number have been passed providing for the punishment of bribery at elections, but it has been found practically impossible to enforce them, partly because of the difficulty of proving the crime, but more largely because each of the great political parties is interested in the maintenance of the corrupt and damnable practice. The remedy for the evil does not rest with the law-makers, but with the people. When they have awakened to the perils and the disgrace which attach to the habit of giving and taking bribes at elections we may expect a reform. So long as the bribe-giver can hold public office and the bribe-taker can associate on terms of equality with decent men we may expect no [illegible] ore Herald.

For the Union.

A Trip up the Hudson.

It was one of those beautiful mornings in the early part of June when nature had robed herself in all the luxuriant glory of early summer and was rejoicing in her own magnificent bloom, that we left our home in old Caroline upon a trip we had long had in contemplation, and it was with high anticipations that we stepped aboard the train at our beautiful little station of Ridgely, and were whirled away through the beautiful country upon either hand with its verden fields of grass and grain over which played the gentle zephyrs of that June morning, when Clayton was soon reached, where we boarded the express and again went flying through the country, past small stations, many of them very neat and tasty with flower gardens and grass plots, and none without some attempt at adornment, and past beautiful farm-houses, well cultivated farms, large fields of luxuriant corn, and still larger fields of waving grain ripening for the harvest, and past forests of peach orchards, and still onward we sped, and as we looked out upon this vast and beautiful panorama, we could but note the many improvements and and advancements that had been made in this section of country in the past twenty years, and we doubt if any section can boast of greater improvement in the same length of time. We well remember just after the war hearing this peninsula spoken of in a most sarcastic manner, as the garden spot of Eden; but show me now a finer section of country.

It was about 11 o'clock when we rolled into the new depot at Philadelphia where we were joined by welcome friends, when after lunch, we boarded the express for New York, and again went flying through the country, whizzing past stations, and though the section of country through which we passed was far advanced in improvements and tillage, but more especially utilized for small trucking for the city markets; yet a section no finer, or a location more desirable than that through which we passed in the morning. We reached New York a little past 3 o'clock and having but a few hours in the city, we hastened to visit such places of interest as our limited time would admit, which of course must include a stroll up Broadway, through the post office, past city hall, custom house, and other public buildings, and thence to the Brooklyn Bridge, that marvelous handiwork of man with its world-wide reputation, in the construction of which has been combined all the inventive genius, discovers of art and science which the ingenuity of man could study out for the accomplishment of this final grand result. In the towering splendor of its massive towers in the imposing and magnificent solidity of its approaches and arches, in the marvelous beauty of the gossamer architecture from which is pendant the great bridge itself, with the ever-moving flood of waters beneath, and the blue vault heaven above, and as we stood upon this gigantic structure, beneath which the tallest ship mast can easily pass, and gazed far out over the vast metropolis upon either hand, with its many domes and church spires pointing heavenward, and the waters of both the Hudson and East Rivers plainly visible as they wend their way northward and eastward, the view is truly most magnificent, and as we started to return from this grand and imposing structure we could but comprehend in its magnitude a work second to none in the history of the world.

Our little party having concluded to take the night boat up the Hudson and return by daylight, we accordingly repaired to the steamer's dock and secured passage on the steamer Drew which left her moorings at 6:30; the whistles were soon blown, the bell sounded, and the ponderous wheels began to turn, and this leviathan of steamers moved out upon the placid waters of the Hudson, ruffled only by the gentle breeze of that June evening and the wake from the many passing boats, but our steamer was soon headed northward, when the bell again sounded and we commenced in earnest our assent of the Rhine of America. Our steamer, like many others that sail out from New York, for size, beauty and magnificence, cannot be beaten in the world, furnished as it is in the most elaborate and costly manner, with the finest guilding and painting the art of man can produce, with its long double-deck saloons richly carpeted, and its finely cushioned seats, surely it is none less than a floating palace. And as we sat back in its richly cushioned chairs and gazed around and about us, upon the wealth and splendor, the magnificent grandeur, with its ease and comfort there displayed upon every hand, we felt for once, yes, for once, in our uneventful history that an early ambition had been realized, viz: that even a clodhopper from the sands of old Caroline might for once be permitted to look in upon and enjoy the rich magnificence, the luxurious comfort and splendor that wealth can produce. But we were soon aroused from our reverie by the announcement that the moon was rising, and going aft we found the dusky shades of evening gathering around us, and the lights from our now distant city fast receeding from our view, and mounting well up the eastern horizon was that glorious old luminary which cast her mellow light down upon us with such brilliancy and splendor as if to remind us of the insignificance of the grandeur of the palace upon which we floated as compared with the glory beyond. Yet, moonlight on the Hudson upon a summer night as seen and enjoyed from the decks of a magnificent steamer is an event in our history ever to be remembered, but being wearied with our day's travel we soon retired to our luxurious stateroom, and after a most refreshing sleep awoke next morning to find ourselves in Albany; but the morning being lowery with occasional showers, we were compelled to forego the pleasure of seeing much of Albany, which was no small disappointment, as we had anticipated so much in a visit to the capitol building (one of the finest in the country) and other places of interest in and about Albany.

At half past eight we boarded the fine steamer C. Vibbard, of the Albany and New York day line, [illegible] soon descended the [illegible] from York [illegible] which grand scenery in which art seems to vie with nature in the grandeur of its embellishments; but as we proceed in our descent and new scenery opens up to our view at every turn and upon either hand we are thoroughly convinced that art is yet far in the back ground. For some miles below Albany may be seen upon the hillsides on either shore neatly kept farms, with fine buildings doted here and there among the hills and ravines, while upon the shores from Albany to the Palasades can ever be seen the mammoth ice houses in which millions of tons of ice are annually stored and shipped to all parts of the country.

Our first stop was at Castleton, a small town on the left bank just above which can be seen the old Staats house, now two hundred years old; this part of the country having been settled by the Staats family before the arrival of Van Rensellaer. Just below Castleton is another old land mark, the nine mile tree, and though it has stood the storms of many winters, it still stands erect upon the shore just nine miles below Albany.

Our next stop was at New Baltimore, upon the right bank, fifteen miles below Albany; and here ends the government dykes which have extended along the shore upon the right all the way from Albany; we soon pass a small promentory one hundred and twenty-five feet high, called the "Four Mile Point," upon which is a fine grape vineyard of one hundred acres.

Our next stop was at Hudson, a small city on the left bank, while from the steamer could be seen the residence of Frank B. Chase, which in point of architecture is the finest in Hudson. As we desend the river, higher becomes the mountains, deeper the river, the more rough and broken the country, and the more wild and grand the scenery.

We next stopped at Catskill just back of which are the celebrated Catskill mountains, and from the steamers' deck just below the landing can be seen away to the westward, Round Top, one of the highest peaks of the Catskill; it was also near this point that Henry Hudson anchored his little fleet on his voyage of discovery September 16th, 1609. Just below this point can be seen the man in the mountain, the broken outline of the mountain having the appearance and form of a reclining giant. Sangerty's is is our next stop upon the right bank, noted for its long pier of 3600 feet, while just above this point can be seen the residence of General J. Watts De Peyster, whose generous hospitality still lives in the memory of many writers. We soon reach a point just 100 miles from New York and 45 below Albany, and upon the left is a small cove known as North Bay; it was here the first steamboat—the Claremont, was built by Robert Fulton. We soon pass Kingston a small city upon the right nearly opposite of which is Fencliff the fine residence of Wm. Aster, while a little farther down the river can be seen nestled among the trees upon the mountam side, (for it is now one continual succession of mountains on either side) the residence of Mrs. Livingston; Wm. Dinsmore, one of considerable note of the upper Hudson; and from a point a little farther down can be seen Over Look mountain-house upon the highest southern peak of the Catskill, nearly 20 miles distant. We next pass Hyde Park, 6 miles north of Poughkepsie, connected with which is one of the finest drives in the country and lined with a succession of fine villas. Our next stop is Poughkepsie 74 miles above New York, and is the Queen city of the Hudson; situated for the most part on a plateau about 200 feet above the river; noted also for Eastman's celebrated Business College, Vassar's large Bowery, and the Military Academy. We stop next at Newburg a neat little city which can be seen from some distance up the river before reaching it, which rises up in natural terraces from the river and is truly a pretty place; while in the southern part of the town can still be seen the headquarters of Washington; the old building with its tall chimneys and steep roof being still in a good state of preservation, while below Newburg we enter what is known as the Highlands, where is to be seen some of the finest mountain scenery on the river; Storm King mountain upon the right rising to the height of 1600 feet, while on the left is Mount Taurus 1500 feet high, and on the right again Old Crow's Nest mountain 1416 feet high, just back of which is Black Rock mountain, and thus it is one succession of high mountains, deep ravines, lofty promontorys, ending perhaps with an abrupt precipice at the bottom of which are huge piles of jagged and broken rocks, and thus it is upon either hand and in every direction, one continual succession of lofty mountain peaks pointing heavenward, lying as they do in almost every conceivable shape and position, while we doubt if there can be found in this country a spot presenting such a variety of beautiful wild mountain scenery as can be found up the Hudson. It is superbly grand, but the grandeur and variety of its magnificent scenery can only be realized by personal observation.

We next stop at West Point, noted for its Military Academy, situated as it is with its government buildings, parade grounds etc., on one of the finest elevations on the Hudson. The grounds are truly beautiful; just below West Point are to be seen the fine residences of such noted New Yorkers as John Bigelow, Morgan, Peale, Arden, Belcher, and many others. We now come to a little bend in the river and upon the left is Anthony's Nose, rising abruptly up from the river 1500 feet high, through which runs the railroad tunnel. It was from this point that was fastened one end of the chain that was thrown across the channel to obstruct the British ships during the Revolution, while a little farther down the river on the left we pass the pleasantly situated little town of Peekskill, not far from which is the residence of Henry Ward Beecher.

We now arrive at a point where the river widens and we enter what is known as Harvester Bay, which is nearly five miles wide, with Mount Tom on the right, 1,000 feet high; while just below on the opposite side is the mouth of the Croten River, from which New York draws her supply of water. Our next stop was at Sing Sing, where is situated the State prison, which stands out permanently upon the river bank, and as we gazed upon its lofty white walls, its narrow-grated [illegible] tinel upon his beat; we could but admit a pleasant situation, but not where we care to take up our residence. We soon pass another pleasant little place known as Tarrytown, just below which is the fine residence of Jay Gould, nestled among the trees upon the hillside, and one of the most prominent landmarks of the Hudson. We next pass the beautiful towns of Irvington, Abbortsford, Dobbs Ferry; just below which is the handsome residence of Cyrus W. Field; and we are now opposite what is known as the Palisades upon our right, which is an abrupt promontory rising up almost perpendicular from the water to a height of from 300 to 500 feet, and extending along the river for a distance of over 15 miles. We next pass the little village of Yorker's, and the tall spires of New York city begin to loom up in the now not far distance, and soon a blast from the whistle warns us of the stop to be made at 22d street, the up-town landing where we disembark, proceed to the Grand Union Hotel, feeling both weary and hungry, but impressed with fact that we had had a most delightful trip, and after a good night's rest at this, one of New York's largest hotels, we took the express for Philadelphia, and thence back to old Caroline, and again resume the routine of business in the tread-mill of life and earthly existence, but we have however the consoling thought not only of the knowledge and information obtained, but we fully realize the fact that but for one little incident, we have had one of the most pleasant and delightful trips of our life. CLODHOPPER.

Changing Scenes.

Day by day the beauty of the landscape deepens under the life-given influence of the glorious sunshine. The transformation that has taken place in the country around our town from the gloomy aspect of a few weeks, to a scene of verdure and beauty, is a sermon and a song of surpassing sublimity and sweetness. The earth is pregnant with hope, and to the diligent farmer every day is a treasure of incalculable worth. Driver, team, plow and harrow are busy, and the song of labor ascends from many an industrious hillside and valley. The motto "make hay while the sun shines," is acted out in every rural homestead, where thrift and industry in the seed time, mean competency and comfort in the harvest. The present is a golden opportunity, and can be turned to a good account. There is no excuse for idleness. Young men of brawny arms who have clung to town during the winter, waiting Micawber like for "something to turn up," may now turn their moments into money by turning up the soil and working on the farm and in the more honorable pursuits of life.

Satan Correcting Sin.

A young lady at a party the other night gave the following advice to a young man in reference to the use of big words: In promulgating the esoteric cogitations, or articulating your superficial sentimentalities, and philosphical, pyschological observations, beware of platitudinous ponderosity. Let your conversational communication possess a rarerified conciseness, a compact comprehensibleness, a coalescent consistency, and a concatenated cogency. Eschew all conglomerations of flatulent garrulity and jejune bablements. Let your extemporaneous descantings and unpremeditated expatiations have intelligibility, psittaceous baccinity, ventriloquial verbosity and vanniloquent vapidity. Shun double entenders, pestiferous profanity, obscurant or apparent. In other words talk plainly, briefly naturally, sensibly, truthfully, purely. Say what you mean, mean what you say, and don't use big words.

Joshua T. Young, Esq., News Ferry, Va., says in the year 1884 he used 10,000 lbs., of fertilizer made with Powell's Prepared Chemicals, 400 lbs., to the acre on land planted in tobacco, and made a good crop of rich, ripe tobacco; good leaf and color, which cured up splendidly. Mr. Young will use nothing else. Brown Chemical Co., manuf'rs, Baltimore Md.

AYER'S

Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 62 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.

HORACE FAIRBROTHER."

Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,

MRS. EMMA GEDNEY."

153 West 128th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried.

A. J. CRANE."

Lake Crystal, Minn., March 13, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

JOSEPH WALDES."

Hyadia, Miss., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles.

F. BRAGDON."

Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is [illegible] beyond the control of medicine.

AYER'S

contains an antidote for all malarial disorders which, so far as known, is used in no other remedy. It contains no Quinine, nor any mineral nor deleterious substance whatever, and consequently produces no injurious effect upon the constitution, but leaves the system as healthy as it was before the attack.

WE WARRANT AYER'S AGUE CURE to cure every case of Fever and Ague, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Bilious Fever, and Liver Complaint caused by malaria. In case of failure, after due trial, dealers are authorized, by our circular dated July 1st, 1882, to refund the money.
