JAMES N. TODD, Editor.

DENTON, MARYLAND.

THURSDAY, Dec. 10, 1885.

MR. HENDRICK'S estate is valued at $100,000.

GEORGIA has gone for prohibition. 134 counties out of 137.

MR. BLAINE'S second volume of "Twenty Years in Congress" will be published in January.

SENATOR WILSON, of Maryland, has taken a suite of rooms at the Ebbitt House for the winter.

MRS. NANCY MOORE, who was the oldest inhabitant of Smyrna, with one exception, died on Sunday last, aged 92.

A PREACHER announces that he sees and talks with the devil every night. As the minister lives in New York, no one need deny the statement.

CONGRESSMAN GREEN, of North Carolina, owns the largest vineyard east of the Sierra Nevadas. Green fields delight him more than congressional pastures.

MISS TILLIE MAHONE, a daughter of the noted Virginia Senator, who is said to be both pretty and intelligent, will make her debut in Washington this winter.

CONGRESSMAN GAY, of Louisiana, is said to have a million dollars at his call. He is a sugar planter, but it is his sand that makes life seem gay and sweet to him.

THE Sandwich Islands are for sale for $14,500,000. The property consists of two sugar houses, one extinct volcano and 700 cases of leprosy, all in middling repair.

DURING the year ended June 30th, 1885, 4,804,146 pieces of undelivered mail matter were received at the dead letter division of the Postoffice Department.

WM. M. VANDERBILT, the wealthiest man in the world, is dead. He was attacked with paralysis of the brain and fell dead from his chair. His estate is valued at $200,000,000.

HON. J. G. BLAINE presented St. Mark's Home, of Augusta, with one pound of silver dollars at a pound party recently. This shows what he thinks of the cartwheel coin.

THERE is a woman in New Haven who has not found fault with her neighbors or wanted a new hat since January 1st, 1885. That is the date she became deaf, dumb and blind.

THE public debt increased more than $4,000,000 during the month of November. A Democratic administration seems to believe that this country is big enough to owe everything.

JUDGE KELLEY says that his present good health is largely due to his mastery of the tobacco habit. He burned the weed five and fifty years, and he actually has slept with the quid in his mouth. Now he neither touches nor tastes the stuff and the blood feels much richer in his veins than when the globules bore [illegible] den of nicotine.

John Sherman.

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

The Senate has dealt admirably with the duty devolved upon it by the Vice-President's death. It first offered the [illegible]y unanimous vote of the respon[illegible]sible majority, to the man whom the Republican party chose for it and who was only kept out of it by the suppression of the Republican vote in the South. Then, when he preferred the more congeniel duties of the floor, it has bestowed the honor upon the most experienced Republican leader in its body. No man questions John Shermans conspicuous ability, or his stalwart fidelity to Republican principles. The Senate serves the country and honors, itself in making Mr. Sherman its presiding officer.

Senator Logan's Declination.

The republicans, who have tenderd to Hon. John A. Logan the nomination for president pro tem of the Senate, have acted wisely and becomingly. The republican party throughout the land deeply felt and gave expression to their feelings that he should receive the nomination not only because he was a candidate in the late national campaign, but also on account of his vigorous and manly fight. He is well qualified for the high and honorable position; but he declines the great honor, feeling that he he can render more valuable service to his party by entering into and discussing the many vital questions which may demand the attention of the Senate. He has conducted his course well in the matter and with no small degree of self-sacrifice. While his party regret his non-[illegible]ntance, it has the full assurance that [illegible]l fill the tendered chair but [illegible]d, tried and true Republican.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7, 1885.

The city is full of people, and the long session of the Forty-ninth Congress began to day at noon. Probably no Congress ever opened more quietly and with less excitement than this. As usual there were crowds of people at the Capitol to see Congress meet. As usual at the beginning of a new session there were many new faces on the floor of the House and the old time bustle, confusion, and noise. Old members greeted each other familiarly, new members were introduced, and there was an interchange of congratulations during the hour preceding noon. The old House officers were re-elected, except the Chaplain, Rev. Mr. Lindsay. This place was given to Mr. Milburn, the blind preacher of Chicago. Representative Reed, of Maine, was honored with the complimentary votes of the Republicans for Speaker. This makes Mr. Reed virtually the leader of the minority. He is considered the ablest man in the House on a quick retort. He is very strong also in attacking and answering the opposite party in debate. And indeed most of the debating ability in the House is on the Republican side.

The Senate, which is always quiet and orderly, was unusually so to-day. It met, organized by electing Senator Sherman President pro tem. to succeed Mr. Hendricks, and adjourned through respect to the late Vice President, whose chair was covered with black.

The President's message is ready and Congress is ready to hear it, which will probably be to-morrow. Although great caution has kept the message from premature publication, its contents are pretty well known. It will be useless for me to give you its points, however, as you will probably read it in full by the time this reaches you.

The Forty-Ninth is the first Democratic Congress to meet under a Democratic Administration since the days of ex-President Buchanan. The country will be watchful to see how much the party has learned since treason shouted in the Capitol and plotted in the Cabinet.

Twenty six years have passed away, thirteen Congresses have come and twelve have gone since, on the first Monday in December, 1859, James Buchanan, the last Democratic predecessor of President Cleveland, sent his annual message to Congress.

Some of Senators and representatives who assembled at the Capitol to-day were there on the first Monday in December, 1858. If they will cast their eyes over this beautiful city, recalling what it was then and noting what it is now, they will have a gague by which to measure the change wrought in the Nation during those twenty six years.

Every measure of public policy which has contributed to the magnificent advancement of the country in all these years has been a Republican measure, and has been carried against the united and unrelenting opposition of the Democracy.

There is much preparation for the financial battle to be fought this winter. Hon. Manton Marble is still corresponding with Members of Congress and endeavoring in every way to put before them facts and figures, upon which arguments on the silver question hinge. It is claimed that the basis of financial legislation will be more clearly defined, understood, and discussed than ever before.

The Hoar succession bill, or something closely resembling it, is likely to be brought forward early, and there are no indications that the Republicans will offer any opposition to it. During the last session the Senate secured the adoption of the plan to make Cabinet officers the successors of the President and Vice-President in case of the death, removal, or disability of both. The bill failed in the House by the obstructive management of a Democrat from Connecticut, Mr. Eaton.

But the first subject brought to the attention of the House will probably be a revision of the rules. Every Member wants them changed, there is no question about that. The trouble is in finding enough Members who want the same change. Each Member sees how a certain change would promote the passage of his little bill, and he will vote for that. In the multitude of schemes, the outcome is uncertain.

A Rotary Iron Jail.

A NOVEL, BUT GOOD IDEA FOR A CAROLINE JAIL.

The people would do well to examine into the merits of the following, before a new jail is constructed, which will soon become a necessity as the present brick work will not hold one half the bribed votes that "Reflex" and Uncle Charlie expect to present to the next grand jury. The new jail just completed cost $30,000. Its peculiar feature is that the cells are arranged in the form of a great iron cylinder, which revolves about so that only one cell is at the opening at any one time. This cylinder is three stories high, there being ten cells on each floor. Its weight is 45 tons, and this ponderous weight is hung from above instead of turning on a track below. The strangest part of the arrangement is that the great cylinder can be turned by a simple little crank with very little force—a man with his left hand moving it readily. When all is complete it is the intention to have a little water motor in the basement, and then by simply moving a lever the cylinder will be set to rotating.

It is suggested that when there are prisoners who it is feared may be trying to cut out, the cylinder can by a motor be easily kept moving all night, so that the prisoners do not remain long enough in one place to do any mischief, or even to crawl out if they had made a partial break. It seems that prisoners have little chance for escape from this new jail. A cage of iron bars completely surrounds the cylinder in which the cells are. The entrance on each floor is guarded by two doors. The officer standing outside does not have to unlock even the first door, but can swing the cylinder around until the cell appears in which is the desired prisoner, and then by a simple movement the inner door is opened, and the prisoner can step out of his cell. Then the officer can open the other door and let the man out, but the other prisoners are way beyond the possible reach of the officer, and it is impossible for them to make any break on him while he is taking a man out or putting in. He can handle any number of men in the same way, and they cannot get within reach of him until he chooses to let them.—Ex.

The Winter's Weather.

It is getting well on toward the middle of December, but as yet winter is only just beginning to put in an appearance. The oldest inhabitant and his neighbor not so old remember when as a rule the people of this State had sleighing for Thanksgiving which lasted, with a brief intermission known as the January thaw, well into March. Whittier had that veriety of weather in his mind when he wrote "Snowbound." The old fashioned winter is not yet extinct, but in the Middle States, as in New England, it has come to be an exception. Scientists have brought forward a number of ingenious theories to account for the change which the climate has undergone during the last half century, and they doubtless would have brought forward more but for the fact that every once in a while a winter appears so extremely inclement and so affluent of terrible snow storms as to freeze out some able arguments that have been advanced and to discourage prophecy.

As for the weather-guessers pure and simple, the persons who make almanacs for a living and guess what the weather is going to be for notoriety, they are by no means so obtrusive as they were a few years ago, when, if our memory serves us, they mostly answered to the name of Wiggins or Vennor. It is more than probable that the weather broke the weather-guesser's heart by repeatedly bringing some of his most brilliant guesses to naught. At all events, he has not been filling the trump of fame this season. If he still guesses, the result of his labors remains locked up in his own bosom, where the Associated Press cannot get at it. Nevertheless, it is gratifying to reflect that the public is not quite left to grope in the dark in regard to the character of the weather of this winter. The past, at least, is secure—we know the first ten days of December. And what of the rest of December and of January and February? Well, a member of the Signal Service stationed at Buffalo has an answer ready, which he modestly submits, not as an oracular revelation, but only for what it is worth.

W. A. Luckey, Esq., Rockbridge, Va., says he has used Powell's Prepared Chemicals for two seasons and finds them equal to any high priced fertilizers, at one-third the cost. Write for descriptive phamphlet to the manufacturers, Brown Chemical Co., Baltimore, Md.

Wanamaker's.

PHILADELPHIA, December 7, 1885.

Let the rich and fashionable dress-stuffs look out for themselves. Their time is so far past that we can't afford to give them more than room in the store. That they have abundantly.

Some of the richest and strongest, extremest, cloths are gone of course; but what are left would make another Philadelphia merchant giddy with self-satisfaction if on his shelves in October, and green with envy to see them here.

It isn't for want of rich and costly stuffs of the very latest date that we turn to those the million will buy for Christmas.

These, because they are good in every sense of the word and cheap. We shall mention nothing today that isn't both.

The most unlikely thing to happen was that tumble of dollar or dollar-and-a-quarter Homespun down to 75 cents. That is the cheapest stuff in the store, considering the craze for Homespun.

The next perhaps is Lupin's merino; 65 cents for 45; but that'll be over shortly. The next grade finer at 50 is gone, except a few colors.

And the next may be the dollar ladies'-cloth for 75 cents. Almost a year ago we began to sell it so. It is just as cheap as ever; and only two or three things have surpassed it all through the year.

Drap de Varna we sold for $1.25 till October 22; then at 75 cents. A whip-cord twill.

Lupin's La Source went down by two jumps from $1.10 to 60 cents. A herringbone twill.

Lupin's Angora, a serge, went down that day from 75 to 50 cents.

Lupin's dark-colored cashmeres fell before that day from 50 cents to 37½. Lupin's merino at 45 and 50 has kept them back; but they'll be gone before Christmas.

Several homespuns down. The prices now are 25, 37½, 50, 60, 75 cents and $1 a yard—the same as for several weeks, except that the piles are growing smaller. There's nothing new in Homespuns. Or rather the news is against you. The wholesale market has emptied itself. We bought in the nick of time. It isn't too much to say now, the grip on the market is here. We couldn't have said so while the wholesale market was threatening to belch out more.

Homespun bouclé, a striking plain of bouclé on homespun, doubly fashionable, down from $1.50 to $1.

Lupin's Marie Margot that fell November 21 from $1.50 to 75 cents is one of the most remarkable stuf we ever encountered. T tear it is out of the question. To slip the yarns is out of the question. And yet it is an open basket canvas. That single fabric is almost enough to make a maker famous.

Wide-wale diagonal went down with it, 81 to 50 cents. A beautiful cloth but looks a trifle flimsy. It isn't. Soft and excellent; better as to make than it looks when looked at closely.

Stripes on mixtures, soft and smooth in texture but rough in color, rather heavy: $1 for 50 cents.

There! Everyone of these sorts includes a variety of colors. We are picking out the stuffs that have tumbled conspicuously, without occasion to tumble in the stuffs themselves. The stuffs are worth much more than the money they wait for. We may have omitted a dozen that ought to be mentioned. Certain we are, we haven't mentioned one that doesn't richly deserve to be in the list. If we hadn't another stuff in the store but these, we should hold the bulk of the Christmas dress-stuff trade.

But we have. There are hundreds on hundreds of stuffs. Remember! things were cheap to begin with. It isn't as if these things had fallen out of a prosperous time. We are apt to forget the time is hard and money close. The only reason trade is brisk here is that we made it brisk by just such feats as we have almost skipped the mention of—the gathering here of our pick of the market near and far, steady or unsteady. We take some risks to be sure; but you know the outcome.

The Christmas thousands of knowing people don't come here for nothing.

A BIG SCARE.

TERRIBLY FRIGHTENED!

'Twas in the month of October, the green foliage of forest and lawn had merged into the beautiful roseate tints of Autumn, strewing Earth with falling leaves, completely covering its velvety surface, that we took occasion to stroll through the fields and woodlands, admiring Nature in all its loveliness as it lay in grand display before our vision.

Ere long, we were suddenly brought to a halt, by the appearance of an inviting seat, which we very quickly made ourselves the glad occupants: and from its proximity to a small running brook, which coursed its way adown the woodland, making music with its gurgling waters, breaking the stillness of the otherwise quiet resort, which so delighted our ears, that we were completely carried away in thought back to the days of childhood.

While retrospecting our past life, commenting upon the innocence of childish play and prattle, and contrasting that period with the present, we were completely o'erwhelmed with crowding events, as busy scenes of the present, all freighted with cares innumerable, would loom up before our imaginations like huge mountains, seemingly impassable. At last, we found ourselves absorbed in deep, silent thought.

Arousing from this "reverie," we wended our way backward and homeward, and once more engaged in the active scenes of business preparing for a vivid fall campaign; and to cut a long story short, we bought too largely of Ladies' Wraps which, unless disposed of, must be carried over, consequently we are scared, yea, badly frightened, and we propose to sell them rather than they shall be left on hand; therefore, we offer great bargains to the ladies, and ask them to come at once, and help us out of our difficulty.
