

THE AUSTRALIAN EMU.

Cousin of the African Ostrich, with the Appetite and Digestion of a Harlem Goat.

The legislature of Australia has passed an act to protect the great emu from the depredations of hunters. This bird is still plentiful in many parts of the country, but the species is gradually becoming extinct. In days gone by the "bushmen" and the wild dogs were the bugbears of the emu's existence, but they have been supplanted by a more inveterate enemy, the white man, who is trying to exterminate this valuable member of the feathered kinigdom, with the assistance of kangaroo dogs. They are hunted and slaughtered with just as much unconcern as were buffaloes on the western prairies. In some sections of Australia, however, the killing of the birds has become mandatory because of the damage inflicted to the wire boundary fences when one of these powerful birds is making a "hot lam" across country. They travel with the speed of a 13-inch shell, and can cut a wire fence with about the same ease.

It differs from its African prototype, the ostrich, in that the feathers are of no value. However, its eggs are much sought after. The eggs are dark green color and rough of surface, and when mounted as vases and similar ornaments are very beautiful. The emu takes some pride in her nest, which cannot be said of the ostrich. The latter lays its eggs in a scraping in the sand, while the emu chooses a place near some tree or stump and collects a bed of leaves, grass and sticks, in which she deposits the eggs. The nest is quite flat, about an inch thick and is oblong in shape, being four feet in length and six inches wide. The average lay is nine eggs, although there has been "clutches" of 18, which, however, is exceptional. Emus are generally seen in pairs and affect the great plains and subsist on the grass. The duty of hatching the egg devolves upon the gentleman emu, who has to devote eight weeks to the operation. The bird lays in winter and is governed by the needs of the chick. When the little fellow emerges from the shell he finds an abundance of tender herbage awaiting him. The plumage of the chick is grayish white, barred lengthwise with broad black stripes. The grown emu's uniform is brown. The emu has the appetite and the digestive apparatus of the goat. It can eat anything and experiences no bad results therefrom. Although dependent on water, it has been known in seasons of drouth to resort to the seashore and satisfy thirst with brine.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Prince Was Not Afraid.

Nervousness is a thing with which the prince of Wales is but little afflicted. Once at a scientific carnival, while Dr. Playfair was showing the prince and his party round, they came to a big vat of chemicals, which were hissing and fizzing away in a very forbidding fashion. The prince seemed much interested in this. Dr. Playfair asked the prince to dip his fingers in the liquid. There was a titter and some dismay among those who heard, but the prince, having looked the doctor straight in the face, put his hand into the hissing cauldron and found the liquid as cold as ice. The explanation was that some chemicals when they boil give out cold instead of heat.

THE HAMADRYAD.

An East Indian Reptile That Will Track You Down If You Have Killed Its Mate.

There is only one beast that will track you down to avenge the death of its mate, no matter how far you go, and that is a snake.

Moreover, it is the most terrible of all snakes, and the largest of the poisonous variety. Its name is the hamadryad. A bite from this reptile will kill the strongest man in two minutes, and, of course, there is no remedy. No one bitten by a hamadryad has ever survived. It chiefly belongs to the far east.

There are generally two hamadryads if there is one, and if you kill one of them the other will be on your track before long in all probability. Short of taking a ship across the sea, there is no way of escaping unless you watch for the snake and shoot it. It will follow you for miles for the chance of a stealthy stroke, and you may climb trees or mountains or ford rivers, but there is no way of evading the hamadryad. It is a sort of nightmare hunt to be chased by one, and when the chase begins either one or the other will have to die within a day or so. The mate of the slain never makes a mistake, but always kills the slayer of its companion, and him alone. This reptile grows to length of 15 feet sometimes, and is fairly common in Malay and New Guinea. One scratch from its fangs is certain and instant death.

Tramp's Wonderful Nerve.

A brakeman tells this story: He was on the rear of a long, mixed train, and the only one, as his partner had been injured that morning. The train was going up a steep grade and had almost reached the summit, when the caboose and two cars of slag broke off. The brakeman started for the brake, when his foot slipped and he fell. Before he could rise the cars got great headway, and he realized with a shudder that he was running down to meet the upcoming express. Presently he saw his train coming back, and it came closer and closer, until the cars nearly touched. Then a man made a flying leap on the car, and with his assistance the brakes were set and the danger averted. The courageous volunteer was a tramp, who had been riding on the train, and for his services on this occasion was given a position on the road, and today he is an official, honored and respected.

SPORT WAS BEATEN.

How a Chicago Know-It-All Young Man Lost a Bet of Five Dollars to a Friend.

The individual who is ready to bet on anything, who delights in being thought a "sport" and is ready to back his opinion with money, is sometimes a treat to his friends.

One such man was walking along State street yesterday with a friend. The friend was a modest and unassuming fellow, and when a stylishly dressed young woman passed them in the crowd of shoppers the betting man said:

HE SPOKE TO HER.

"What a beauty!" and his companion said: "For half a cent I'd speak to her." Then the betting man began to offer wagers that the other was afraid to address a word to the young woman. His bet of five dollars was taken and the modest man hurried after the lady, lifted his hat and walked beside her to the next corner. When he returned and pocketed the money the crestfallen sport asked what she had said.

"Oh, she asked why I wasn't home last night. You see, she's my sister."—Chicago Daily News.

THE ART OF COOKING.

It Lies in Knowing How to Prepare One Dish in a Hundred Appetizing Ways.

No more should be cooked than is intended to be eaten at one meal, says Mrs. Lemcke, the cooking expert. The true art of cooking lies not in cooking large pieces of meat, or in cake, bread and pastry baking, but in how to prepare one kind of meat and fish in a hundred different ways, how to utilize everything so that nothing is wasted and to convert all that may be left from one meal to savory and palatable dishes for the next; to combine herbs, spices, onion, chives and garlic in such a way that all the ingredients are harmoniously blended, that nothing predominates; that vegetables retain their natural flavors and are not spoiled by the ingredients added; that meat is cooked in such a way that nothing of its nutritious value is lost. A great deal of the unhappiness of this world is due to poor food. Drunkenness, which is a craving for stimulating and intoxicating drinks, is a certain consequence of an injudicious diet. If all our women were better acquainted with the elements of the human system they would then know that no one can keep in good health unless these elements receive the proper nourishments to supply the waste of tissue.

Fasting for Brain Workers.

A number of feminine brain workers have come to the conclusion that they can do better work by going without breakfast, eating only a light luncheon and making six o'clock dinner practically the only meal of the day. Many of those who have tried it declare that they have entirely overcome the faintness that they felt at first, and that they are able to put their faculties to better use than ever before.

Courtesy Wins Many Friends.

"I know a young girl who is so punctilious, it is a pleasure to invite her anywhere," said a lady not long since. "She always keeps her appointments to the minute, never forgets her engagements, and is always to be depended upon. She is very popular with young and old, and there is little doubt that she owes much to this praiseworthy attribute. In the matter of invitations the least one can do to show their appreciation of the courtesy extended them is to be prompt."

For Early Spring Freckles.

Take one teaspoonful of powdered borax and dissolve it in one pint of rain water. Add one gill of buttermilk. Bathe the face and hands at night before retiring. Use clear cold water next morning and your complexion will be like satin. This is to be used at once as the mixture will not keep. It is just enough for one application, and is excellent for removing freckles caused by the spring sun.

An Ideal Tooth Powder.

Four ounces prepared chalk, four ounces powdered orris root, one ounce pulverized sugar, one ounce castile soap, made fine as powder. Mix all together. Flavor with a few drops of wintergreen mixed well into the powder. Shake until all is of an equal powdery lightness. This will whiten and preserve the teeth.

How Spain Raised Money.

Under Spanish rule a chief source of income to church and state in the Philippines was a lottery, which yielded $200,000.

Helped Him Out.

It is about an old judge—well, say old Judge Prolicks—for it would not do to give his name away before all his Brooklyn friends. He joined the Methodist Church of the Regeneration up-town some time ago, with the express understanding that he was not to be expected to actively participate in any of their festivals of prayer.

In making this provision, the judge said that even in his chosen profession he had rarely been called upon to do anything in the way of pleading or public declaration, his labors being almost entirely in the line of legal researches, preparation of briefs, forms and the like. His preference was courteously deferred to by the judge's brethren in the fold, and for some time he was not called on to do anything more than pass the plate and punctuate the intervals of supplication with warm and tremulous "amens."

But one evening, not long ago, a visiting divine was leaning the service, and he worked the participants up to such a degree of fervor that even the staid old judge acted as if it was all he could do to "hold in." This was noticed with pleasure by one of the deacons, who called out, "Will Brother Prolicks please lead us in prayer?"

The judge was winged by this sudden discharge. He fluttered to the limit of the anxious seat, and for a moment seemed to wilt from sight. Then his fervor, smothered for a moment, flamed into life again. The judge sprang to his feet and plunged into prayer. With much incoherence, aided, nevertheless, by the resources of his calling, he petitioned as follows:

"This evening we beg mercy and forgiveness for all people situate, lying and being within this tenement, edifice, erection or structure devoted to worship. We are miserable sinners of, in, during and through the existence, duration and continuance of our life or lives—that is to say—the life or lives of each, and either or all of us, collectively, jointly or severally. We have grievously, persistently, feloniously and with malice aforethought offended against the law in such cases made and provided. We have, each and every one of us, at divers and sundry times, occasions, intervals and places, as will be more particularly and at length set forth, proclaimed, declared, enumerated and elaborated in the indictment hereunto annexed, committed, performed, perpetuated, and caused to be done such acts, deeds, transactions and offenses as have rendered us unworthy the leniency of this our law-giver to give, grant, devise, transfer, convey, set over, lease and bequeath unto each and every servant, their assigns, and to the survivor or survivors of them, such mercy sustaining, commiseration and relief as the need may indicate, and to this court may seem meet, just, worthy and commended in the premises. We know that the relief sought by us petitioners and all parties serving under them or either of them, is such as passeth the measure of human understanding, but we know furthermore, and by these presents declare, affirm, insist and maintain that mercy is as boundless as the heavenly dominions. Infinite power extendeth over all those certain lots, pieces or parcels of land and water situate, lying and being in the solar system, and described as follows, to wit—Amen.

MATTERS OF INTEREST.

The handsome residence of Mr. Wm. H. Alberger, Federalsburg, is undergoing a handsome renovation by the paint brush.

Mr. Isaac H. Dixon, of Baltimore, has purchased the Tilghman estate, of 200 acres, near Claiborne, Talbot county, for $5,800. It has a handsome residence on it.

The Choptank Pile Driving and Wharf Company has been been organized in Cambridge, with Thomas Dreenan as president and Levi B. Phillips as secretary and treasurer.

Defaulting Teller William N. Boggs, who is serving his sentence in the New Jersey State Penitentiary, has been assigned to timekeeping in one department. He bemoans his fate in being sent to prison, and frequently weeps.

The latest returns from last week's storm state that a colored woman was killed near Millington in the wreck of her home. The small farmhouse was occupied by a colored family, and when the storm struck the building was crushed. The other members of the families escaped with minor or no injury.

The directors of the Farmers' Bank of Delaware held a meeting at Dover, and decided to close the branch bank at New Castle, under authority of an act of the recent legislature. Industries in New Castle suffered so during the period of financial depression that the bank there was run at a considerable loss.

Secretary of State Hughes has issued to Dr. R. S. Stephens, of Dover, a certificate of incorporation for the Delaware Opthalmic College. Dr. Stephens, who is a graduate and manufacturing optician, intends to establish the college. He will open it next fall. A course of instruction covering a period of six months will be given.

Governor Lowndes received a letter from Governor Stone, of Pennsylvania, informing him of the coming exposition of American manufacturers, and asking that the manufacturers of this State participate. Governor Lowndes has replied that he will be pleased to bring the matter before the merchants and manufacturers of the State.

The commencement exercises of the Harrington High School will be held in the Opera House on June 1. The following are the graduates: Elizabeth B. Fleming, Maggie Bending, Henry Prettyman Swain, H. L. Wright, M. L. Short, S. S. Sawtelle, R. B. Walcotts, Leonard Harrington. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached by Rev. Richard Downes, pastor of the Presbyterian Church.

A Bible Saved His Life.

A peculiar instance of the saving of life by a Bible comes from Manila. In a letter to Mrs. C. N. Boyd, of Butler, Ga., Lieutenant Colonel Jame E. Barnett, of the Tenth Regiment, tells of his escape from a dangerous wound, if not death, while in action in the Philipine Islands.

In the side-pocket of his blouse Colonel Barnett carried a Testament. A Filipino bullet, headed for his heart, struck the little book, was deflected from its course, struck a watch in another pocket, causing a bad dent in the time-piece, and stopping it, and took another direction without further damage. The force of the bullet caused a nauseous feeling for some time, but aside from this the Colonel is none the worse for his experience.

A Novel Way to Pay a Debt.

Every editor has received them, the postmaster sends them to the editor. For instance, there was a man by the name—well, say Tim Short, who sent us three notices to stop his paper, he didn't want it any longer. Upon investigating the subscription book we found that Tim was short $10. He never had paid a cent and yet he stopped his paper as a matter of economy—to us. He didn't want to lose any more money by him. A few days after Short was in church and his melodios tenor rang out loud and clear in the soul-stirring song, "Jesus Paid it All." He might have been mistaken, but his earnestness impressed us. So the next day we sent him a receipt in full, begging his pardan for not knowing that he had made an assignment of his liabilities to the Lord.—Exchange.

A Plucky Little Fellow.

Among the replies to a Baltimore News want "ad" was the following last week:

"Seeing as you are in nead uf a brite boy and as brite boys is very sceerce i thought i wood rite you a few lions two let you no where a brite boy can be found as i run all my mothers errants and sumtimes i run em fur my farther and my mother says i am the britest boy she is got i aint got anny brothers but i got lots of sisters and only ate of em is a working one of em got lade off last weak and fore of em aint done no work fur more an a year and my farther says if i dont sune go to wurk that he will have too sew please send me wurd when you want me to cum to work i hope you are a jew caus i would like to have satday off my mother sends her love and best respecks to you.

A Hint for Advertisers.

John Wanamaker advertised some time since that he would sell at his New York store, a large assortment of books at 10 cents each. A young man in Brooklyn sent 30 cents by mail with the titles of three volumes that he desired. One of the books could not be supplied. The firm took the trouble to write the customer a polite letter informing him that one book was out of stock. Three or four days later the Brooklyn man received from Wanamaker a credit check for 10 cents.

Here is an example of the kind of storekeeping that makes business. It has been frequently and truly said that advertising is of little avail unless it is backed up by the right sort of treatment after the customer has been brought into direct relations with the advertiser. In a matter involving 10 cents, Wanamaker took the trouble to see that the customer was perfectly satisfied. The very form of the letter is a model. It is brief, without being curt, and the language could not be more scrupulously polite if a sale of hundreds of dollars' worth of goods had hung in the balance. Many small advertisers who do not take the trouble to please their customers are likely to grumble at the advertising and insist that it does not pay in proportion to the cost of it.—National Advertiser.

Delaware Whitecaps.

We read of them in far-off sections, but Delaware has brought them within 22 miles of us. It seems William Fleetwood, of near Frederica, thinks more of a fair widow of that place, named Isaacs, than he does of his legal wife. The citizens of that place tried to use moral suasion with Fleetwood. For a few days they succeeded, but this did not last long and upon seeing him again with the widow Isaacs made up their minds that his dastardly conduct deserved and should receive punishment. After consultation it was decided that a dose of whitecap would about fit the case, and on Friday night last it was administered at midnight. On that date some twenty stalwart figures masked and cloaked surrounded the widow Isaac's domicile. Fleetwood and the widow were commanded to come forth, and after a little moral suasion they obeyed. Then the captain of avengers in a few pointed sentences informed them that Frederica was entirely to slow a village for such beings as them to rotate in; that it could no longer hold them finally that they should pack up within two hours and "git." To impress William and his inarmorata with the seriousness of the affair the entire band assembled in front of them flourishing carriage and cart whips. William and the widow evidently concluded that there was trouble ahead for them if they did not obey the mandate, and pack up and "git" they did forthwith, not waiting even to bid farewell or leave their future address with their midnight visitors. They were warned as they started that it would not be conducive to their health were either of them found within the sacred precinct Frederica again.
