Miss Grant's Trousseau

Some of the Pretty Gowns Being Prepared for Her Wedding.

MISS JULIA DENT GRANT, the granddaughter of the hero of the greatest war this nation has ever known, the niece of the woman who officiated as lady president of the world's fair at Chicago in 1893, the daughter of a general officer in our recent war with Spain, an American girl surrounded by American traditions and from whom other things might be expected, is to give her heart and hand and fortune in marriage to a Russian prince in the fall and leave her home in the country for which her father and grandfather have fought to live in a palace in a land of the oppressed.

It is only the swell society set that applaud such a marriage, while the ordinary beings condemn it as unbefitting a girl with such a parentage. But while the ordinary people of the country may condemn it they are as much interested in the wonderful clothes which are being prepared for the occasion as are the society people of Newport. Every American is interested in knowing that this bright American girl will have a trousseau second to none that has ever been worn by any of the great heiresses of American papas who have chosen titled foreigners for husbands. And all this Miss Grant will have, and even more, for the modes of the present time are so far in advance of those of past years that it is possible to far surpass all others of the elaborate trousseaus that have been features of previous fashionable weddings. The only one that can be said to have compared favorably with the trousseau now being prepared for Miss Grant was that of Miss Virginia Fair, now Mrs. Vanderbilt, and that was envied by all the wealthy young women of the Gotham swell set.

SOME OF MISS GRANT'S GOWNS.

AN OPERA CAPE FOR MISS GRANT.

It is only necessary to consider that Mrs. Palmer is conducting the arrangements for Miss Grant's wedding to realize that it will be an elaborate one, for Mrs. Palmer is going to show Newport society a thing or two on this occasion to even up for the treatment she received when first she came to Newport two years ago. At that time Mrs. Palmer and her social aspirations were frowned upon by the Gotham dames, who spoke of her as "that hotel keeper's wife." To-day the same women are eagerly cultivating Mrs. Palmer's acquaintance, and almost begging for an invitation to the coming wedding. But the invitations are, of course, not yet out, and who will get the coveted stationery can only be guessed at.

In this trousseau that is now being made will be seen the loveliest of rare old laces, the softest of silks in all the prettiest shades, chiffons, mousseline de soies, and pretty tulle gowns.

The hats will be numerous and will of course be in the choicest of the fall styles. On them will be seen ribbons, tulles, flowers and feathers. Among these hats there will be a charming picturesque one of rush straw trimmed with shaded roses, lace and white satin baby ribbon.

Another of the hats of which I have been told is to be a very chic toque made of a finely tucked black mousseline de soie, and trimmed with a fan bow of lace, and a knot of turquoise velvet, with a large buckle of brilliants.

Just what the wedding gown will be cannot even be guessed at with any degree of accuracy, for both Miss Grant and Mrs. Palmer insist that it has hardly been thought of as yet, and while that is probably a fabrication in a small way, yet so carefully guarded is the secret of what it is to be that it is impossible to conceive any idea of it. But there are minor gowns being planned, and among them are some beautiful tea gowns.

These tea or breakfast gowns are to be of the softest and daintiest silks, made with large collars trimmed with lace and insertions, and some in muslins made in graceful shapes, and trimmed with kilted flounces edged with ribbon frills. One morning gown of black muslin is to be made over a slip of the palest cerise.

Of the many beautiful gowns that are being planned for all sorts of occasions, one is to be of the finest muslin made up with beautiful insertions of valenciennes insertion and French embroidery in a full blouse effect. The sleeves of this will be long, and also made of the valenciennes insertion and French embroidery, with a frill of lace that will fall over the hand.

Another of the gowns will be a delightful affair of embroidered mousseline de soie. It will have a clinging skirt edged with a frill. This is to be made over a slip of sky blue silk. The flounce that is to be around the bottom of the skirt will have three tiny ruchings of white satin ribbon to finish at the top. A finely shirred yoke and sleeves that will be made in one piece. This style of yoke and sleeves is something entirely new for the fall styles. They are quite difficult to make and require the service of an experienced modiste. The Stewart Berthas for the bodice of this gown will be made with surplus folds on the front and edged with the tiny white satin ribbon. A mousseline de soie sash will encircle the waist and fall at the back with long floating ends.

A third of these gowns will be of Mauresque lace, to be made with three deep frills of the lace on a clinging skirt. It will have a deep pointed yoke of the Mauresque lace with the lace brought rather full from under the arms to the front and crossed over in the waist line. It will have a tight sleeve of the lace cut in a V over the hand.

These are but a few of the many bewitching gowns with which this bright girl will be equipped, and to describe all of them would be impossible, even though it were possible to get the descriptions from those who are designing them.

Her dainty lingerie will be in keeping with her gowns. There will be dozens and dozens of pieces made of the finest of linen, made with many tiny tucks and valenciennes lace and insertion, and hand work of the finest of hemstitching and French embroidery. There will also be many silk petticoats trimmed with ruffle after ruffle. The variety and quality of the hosiery that is being selected would in itself make a long letter and an interesting one.

SARAH DAVIDSON.

BATHING COSTUME.

The Amateur Mermaid Takes Her Daily Plunge in a Jaunty Suit of English Serge.

The amateur mermaid of midsummer is not a fabled being, but a charming reality. She gowns herself in becoming costumes of English serge, silk poplin or brilliantines; in fact any material at all that does not cling to the figure.

No fashionable bathing costume is minus its bloomers. These are of scant proportions and button above the knees in Turkish trouser fashion.

THE AMATEUR MERMAID.

The skirt and bodice are combined in one piece upon a narrow band of corded silk ribbon or bengaline silk. A very pretty costume, and one that contrasts effectively with the white sand of the seashore, is developed in white English serge trimmed with bands of sea green brilliantine. The skirt drops evenly with the knee line and is faced with sea green wash silk.

The waist is cut on plain lines with a square neck finished with bands of green silk. The sleeves are very short puffs and are unconfined, many being of the opinion that bands around the arms, even though loose, prevent an absolutely free movement.

ODD WEDDING RULES.

Characteristic Customs That Prevail at Marriages in Norway, Sweden and Siberia.

Every country has its own particular regulations and ceremonies regarding matrimony. Wedding presents in Norway are not of the expensive but useless kind that they are with us. They consist of such things as pots and pans, plates and dishes, a feather bed, half a dozen sheep, a sack of potatoes, and so forth. Sir G. W. Dasent says that the Norwegians, in reference to marriage, as to other matters, put their best foot foremost and try to make the most of things generally. A lad went out to woo a wife. Among other places he came to a farmhouse, where the people were very poor, but they wanted to make him think that they were well-to-do. Now, the father had got a new arm to his coat. "Pray, take a seat," he said to the wooer, "but there's a shocking dust in the house." So he went about wiping all the benches and tables with his new coat sleeve, but he kept the other behind his back. The wife had one shoe much better than the other and she went stamping and sliding with it up against the stools and chairs, saying: "How untidy it is here; everything is out of its place!" Then they called out their daughter to come and put things to rights, but she had got a new cap, so she put her head in at the door and kept nodding and nodding, first to this side and then to that. "Well, for my part," she said, "I can't be everywhere at once." In this way the wooer was led to believe that he had come to a well-to-do household.

Many superstitions prevail in Sweden with regard to marriage. It is said that if a girl be fond of cats she will not be an old maid, as we should say, but have a bright day for her wedding. The Swedish bride sometimes wears a coronet of myrtle, or, when that is not procurable, of colored paper. Here, as in Norway and other countries of northern Europe, there is too much eating and far too much drinking at weddings. In Sweden the repasts on these occasions continue for hours. When asked to take your place at the table it is considered polite to make as stout a resistance as possible. During the repast a collection is made for the bride and sometimes also for the poor of the parish. In Siberia there is a good custom that a bride on coming to her husband's house has to give a dinner prepared with her own hands as a test of the education she has received. If she succeeds in gratifying her guests it is taken as a proof, not only of the young womans own excellence, but also as a recommendation of her whole family, by whom she was instructed so usefully.

How to Test Wheat Flour.

The genuineness of entire wheat flour may be tested by chewing a small quantity for a few moments. Raw flour made from the entire grain has a sweet taste and a rich, nutty flavor, the same as that experienced in chewing a whole grain of wheat, and produces a goodly quantity of insoluble gluten, while a spurious article tastes flat and insipid, like starch, or has a bitter taste consequent upon the presence of impurities.

To Clean Jet Ornaments.

With a soft brush remove any dust and then apply a little oil on a piece of cotton wool, afterwards polishing with a leather.

Her View of It.

"My dear," said Dawson the other evening, looking up from his paper, "here is an article from the pen of an eminent physician, in which he says sleeping in the daytime is very injurious to the health."

"Well, that's just like a man," answered Mrs. Dawson. "They are always trying to trump up some excuse for staying away from church."—Chicago Daily News.

Cook and Policeman.

"Why don't you get dinner?" he asked.

"You didn't marry a cook," she replied, simply.

Time passes. It is now the dead of night, and muffled footfalls are heard.

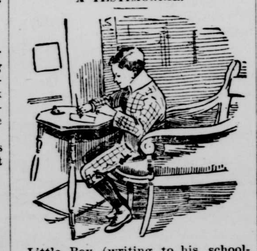

"Why don't you go and drive the burglars away?" she exclaimed.

"You didn't marry a policeman," he said.—Puck.

Years of Discretion.

Years of discretion surely are
Life's sweet completion—
Yet willful Fate delights to mar,
For when we reach them there's a jar;
The years are more apparent, far,
Than the discretion!

A Jealous Woman.

A sensation was created at the Delaware railroad station at Dover the other day, when Miss Horn, appearing from near the coal bins below the pumphouse, fired shots at Louis Levy.

Levy resides there and had just alighted from the train, in company with another man, from Milford, and was going to his home, a short distance from the station. None of the shots took effect.

Jealously is supposed to have prompted the attack. Levy and Miss Horn have been on terms of acpuaint ship, but not of any intimacy, according to his statement. Miss Horn lives in Dover.

The shooting created a great sensation at the station.

After the attack upon Levy, Miss Horn left the station and went swiftly to her home. No attempt was made to arrest her.

The Farmer is King.

The farmer is the man who moves the world. If he should go on a strike, refuse to raies a crop for a single year it would produce a more disastrous effect than would result from a universal strike of all the brotherhoods of railroad employers and trades union combined. He, with his glitteriug share, furnishes substances for all the brotherhoods and everybody else, and if he should go out for some real or imaginary wrong he would paralyze the commerce of the world on sea and land. Every locomotive would rust in its stall, the cars would rot on the track, the song of the spindle would be hushed and silent, the goods of the merchant would be moth eaten on the shelves and even the government would be powerless to interfere. That share though bright glitters only when it is idle. It hides its polish under a six inch layer of usefulness. That man, though intelligent, dresses in homespun and patiently toils on year by year bearing the ill he cannot shun, and because he does not strike, the world moves on and the people have breadto eat. —Ex.

Another Snake Story.

Eli Perkins, of Hickman, had a thrilling encounter, so he declares, with water snakes the other night. Perkins was out coon hunting and his dogs treed a raccoon down in a branch. He was wading across a shallow stream to them, when he observed a figure swimming rapidly towards him, and the next moment he was enveloped in the coil of a huge water snake. The snake coiled about his body with crushing force, and the fact that he was alone made his situation desperate. His hands were free, however, and he drew from his pocket a small pocket-knife, his only weapon of defense, and began slashing at the slimy coils about him. The snake had seized Perkins by the waist of his trousers and he grasped it tightly about the neck, thus lessening the danger. As Perkins began hacking at the snake it gradually relaxed its coils and a few blows ended its career. A new danger confronted him, however, for the sounds of the stuggle had attracted other snakes, and they were now swimming all around him, hissing loudly. Perkins secured a firm hold on the body of the slain reptile and yelling at the top of his voice, he began striking at the snakes with the body of their dead companion as he rushed from the water. As he fled for the shore several twined about his legs, but he managed to rid himself of them and reached a place of safety he fell in a faint. His left hand and arm are severely gashed where he cut himself in his frantic efforts to rid himself of the lothsome reptile.

Delaware Tomato Crop.

A Bridgeville correspondent to a city paper is inclined to think tomatoes are having too much rain in that section. He says: The prospects are at the present for a big tomato crop, as the season up until last week has been very favorable to tomatoes, but should wet weather continue for a much longer period the crop will be an utter loss. Too much wet weather is disastrous to tomatoes, and consequently, the fears entertained by the growers. As stated above, the yield this season will be immense if the weather clears, and canneries all over the state have begun operation. The fact that contracting with canners gives growers so much bother and worry has been the means of a great many growers discontinueing the contracting practise, During the past few seasons there has been unlimited demand for tomatoes. This fact accords growers the privilege of shipping their tomatoes with an absense of much less worry and far better returns. Buyers of this town, who this week will buy on a big scale, are of the opinion that there will be no glut in the market this season, notwithstanding the big crop. If the inclement weather affects the crop the demand will be great.

The growing of sugar corn for canneries has become a leading industry in this section, and this season is very favorable one.

Shipments of cantaloupes have been large from this point the past season, and the majority of the growers have derived good profits from the sales of their melons.

The apple yield has been extremely large this year, and there promises to be a big crop of late varieties Democratic politicians have expressed themselves as being sorry that that they could not have some of the now abundant "hard cider" for their political meeting last fall.

Farmers are well up with their work and a great many have finished plowing for wheat. They will begin saving fodder about the middle of next week.
