of Money to remove all the Clothing from the Head of Elk, intended to supply the Southern Army, without pointing out any Mode of Re-payment, he observed with surprize, that they to accomplish this purpose, had agreed to dispose of Specifies at half the Value without consulting of him. And when he afterwards found that they in their Letters of the 16 day of July still claimed the direction, and held out the Idea of controulling him in the disposition of Specifies, he not only thought it his duty, but in consequence thereof did in his Letter to the Board of the 18th obliquely hint the impropriety of this Assumption, expecting that in future he would have been left at liberty to have "managed and improved the Revenue with the best Oeconomy and to the utmost benefit of the public" agreeably to the express Letter of the Law. But contrary to his expectations, being at the Board he was called upon by one of the Members to explain himself upon that point, urging that it appeared to him that the Intendant meant to convey the Idea that the Governor
