THURSDAY, JULY 10, 1902.

THE first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress adjourned finally at 5.30 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, July 1st. In his closing address Speaker Henderson said: "I am proud to say that no House of Representatives since the Constitution was adopted has, in the same length of time, done the amount of work that this House of Representatives has done. And you have done your work like men—earnest and honest as you have all been in carrying out your convictions so far as possible into legislation. There has never been an hour when the acrimony of debate left scars in any breast in this House. That fact has much gratified your presiding officer. You have all been faithful and untiring and in the twenty years of my services I have never seen so many friends in the closing days of the session as I now witness.

OF THE 258 men of the graduating class of Princeton this year sixty-nine members will study law, 48 will go into business, 23 will enter medical schools and 10 will study for the ministry. There are 185 Republicans in the class 30 Democrats; while three declare themselves anarchists. More than a hundred are Presbyterians, one is a Christian Scientist, one a Mohammedan, one a Latter Day Saint and one a Transcendentalist. Scott was voted the favorite author, with Dickins a close second. Longfellow is the favorite poet, with Burns next. History is the favorite study, base ball is the favorite sport, and Vassar the favorite woman's college.

THE coal strike is not yet ended and the serious effects upon the various industries of the country are beginning to appear rapidly. It is no longer a question between mine owners and miners, but the rights of the people and manufacturing interests are being being interfered with. President Roosevelt has aptly stated the labor problem is the most important public question that must be solved. The conditions in the mines will [illegible]

[illegible] have no hesitation in saying that politics should be based on business principles. More of the business men of our country should enter the political arena, in both State and national politics, and elevate politics to a business standard."

Summer complaint is unusually prevalent among children this season. A well developed case in the writer's family was cured last week by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy—one of the best patent medicines manufactured and which is always kept on hand at the home of ye scribe.
