Weather For April.

The following forecast for this month is gathered from Word and Works.

Storms of rain, wind, low barometer and high temperature as April comes in will be followed by cold, northerly winds, with frost and freezing northward from 1st to 3d. Frost may reach far into Central to Southern sections. Plants and tender vegetation should be protected during the first three or four days of April.

About the 4th to 6th, change to warmer with more rain and storminess likely. Hail storms will be most natural at all the April disturbances, and sudden drops of temperature should not surprise any one after all well defined storm movements.

The storm period central on the 10th will bring a period of storms. The culmination will fall about Sunday 10th to Wednesday 13th. Look for rain, hail and thunder on 11, 12 and 13. Change to cool will follow these storms. From 15 to 17 it will again be very warm, followed by storms.

Many vicious thunder storms, with high temperature may be expected 21, 22 and 23.

One of the most decided, and perhaps violent storm periods of the month extends from about the 26 to 29. This is a time when destructive hail storms are almost a certainty in very many sections. Abnormal downpours of rain will also visit Central to Southern regions. The month will go out with high barometer, cold winds and frosty nights northward.

Tea and Coffee.

Tea is a nerve stimulant, pure and simple, acting like alcohol in this respect, without any value that the latter may possess as a retarder of waste. It has a special influence upon those nerve centers that supply will power, exalting their sensibility beyond normal activity, and may even produce hysterical symptoms, if carried far enough. Its active principle, thein, is an exceedingly powerful drug, chiefly used by nerve specialists as a pain destroyer. Tea is totally devoid of nutritive value, and the habit of drinking it to excess, which so many American women indulge in, particularly in the country, is to be deplored as the cause of much of our American nervousness.

Coffee, on the contrary, is a nerve food. Like other concentrated foods of its class, it operates as a stimulant, also but, upon a different set of nerves from tea. Taken strong in the morning, it often produces dizziness and that peculiar visual symptom of over stimulous which is called muscæ volitantes—dancing flies. But this is an improper way to take it, and rightly used it is perhaps the most valuable liquid addition to the morning meal. Its active principle, caffeine, differs in all psychological respects from thein, while it is chemically very closely allied.—K. L. Armstrong.

Nature Never Yet Created a Degenerate.

Mr. Editor:

That Nature has never yet created a degenerate, is a statement to which I invite successful contradiction. The idea that insanity is hereditary is preposterous and only originated in a diseased imagination.

It is good to be possessed of the "higher education" but it is better to be possessed of practical knowledge, and we cannot obtain it without training. But there is a right and a wrong way of applying this training or educating, just as there is a right and a wrong way of assembling chemicals in order that they may become agents for accomplishing good, or operating machinery that certain kinds and qualities of work may be effected.

But a human being is not a mere machine by any means. It is a universal law of all machines that whenever there is a gain in power without a corresponding increase in the initial force, there is a loss in speed. Now this same law is applicable to the child: Increase the amount and time of study (the load) without a corresponding increase in sufficient outdoor recreation and mind rest (the initial force) produces an inability to quickly and thoroughly comprehend, retain and reproduce (which is the loss in speed).

Studying longer than an hour and a-half at a time will confuse the mind, and the person will be unable to reason clearly. If you do not think so, try it. Concentrate your whole mind upon what is before you as the scholar is forced to do, and see if you can give a concise and connected account of what you have been studying without nervousness or an inability to control the action of your thoughts.

Now, by actual observation, the time given to study, instead of being diminished to a reasonable time, is increased. Not only is the time of study increased, but the amount of each lesson is increased. And, when school was opened after the small-pox scare, the lessons were increased nearly double to what they were previously.
