He succeeded, and after twenty years or more with a grown son, returned to his old home for a visit with relatives, and to make the young man acquainted with the many kinsfolk he had never seen. This was in the month of December last. While visiting these friends, the sunny smiles and petite figure of one of Caroline's fair daughters, who was not of kin, attracted the attention of the son, and ere two weeks had passed Cupid's darts had sunk deep into his heart In his western home he could not forget her, and the sequel has been told above. We join with other friends in wishing them the many joys of a long and happy life.

Letter From Rev. J. S. Wickline.

Dear Bro. Ramsdell:

Find enclosed $1 for AMERICAN UNION for another year.

We are now in our usual health. I had grip for four weeks through conference time.

I have preached four funeral sermons in the past three months, and celebrated two marriages. I have more work to do than time to do it in.

We have a beautiful walnut center table, and a fine parlor lamp, bought with gold, given us by the ladies of Denton before we left there. We should be glad to have everyone who gave in that contribution visit our home, and any others who can. We have the kindest feelings for all our friends there.

Our home is both beautiful and convenient, with all necessary outbuildings, all painted, and a fine blue grass sod on the lawn.

We have two-thirds of an acre in a garden, for fruit and vegetables, with a good prospect for strawberries, blackberries and raspberries.

We join in love and best wishes for the salvation of all the people of Denton.

Some good friends have gone over the mystic river since we left, among them Brothers James Swann and Henry Fisher.

May we all meet in the heavenly country.

Very truly yours,
J. S. WICKLINE.

The American Public Schools.

"LONDON, April 8th.,—The Mosseley Commission tonight issued its report on the Educational System of the United States in a volume of 400 pages, illustrated. It covers every department of American educational work. Especially it praises manual training, co-education, and the sanitary and hygienic conditions of the buildings and school rooms. It has been arranged to distribute the books to all officials and others, especially interested in education in the United Kingdom."

Mr. Editor:

The above quotation is from the Associated Press telegraph dispatches of recent date and gives a pretty good idea how to judge by comparison, of the system of education to which our young people are subjected. No doubt the gentlemen on this commission are honorable, sensible men, and trained educators, knowing of what they speak by practical experience in such matters in their own country, and doubtless they made a wide and critical examination of educational work on this side the Atlantic—for John Bull's purse is big—and if they were prejudiced at all we might expect their judgment to lean patriotically to their own side of the sea. Yet their verdict on our system is favorable—very favorable—and even "particularly praise" some branches. Moreover the report is to be seat throughout the length and breadth of the land. This ought to give satisfaction and encouragement to those engaged in the training of our youth, in spite of the fact that they have to endure some adverse criticism from some who live nearer home, and it is only another illustration of the adage that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country and in his own house."

This is not a soft and easy world for any good people, or good things to live in, and popular education is not to be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease, but has to do its share of the fighting and fussing to which we are all subjected.

France is in the thick of it now, so is old England In both cases it is a struggle against the mighty power of ecclesiastical hierarchies who desire to grasp and retain control of the thought and sentiment of these nations, and in both cases the hierarchies have scored a success. On this side the struggle goes on, but the other fellow is on top at present. Still the downed man is a kicker and can put up a fight that is interesting, and he doesn't stop at Queensberry rules or anything of that sort.

It is not generally known perhaps, that there is an anti popular education association in this country. I received a bundle of circulars from them some time ago. They claim to have among their members hundreds of the best literary people of the land, or something to that effect. They also claim to be entirely unsectarian, but we are not obliged to believe everything. One thing certain, they were lavish in their display of printed matter and moreover were entirely unscrupulous in their statements. Their mode of attack was the simple process of exaggeration, vilification and calumny, and any opportunity that offers in the public prints is eagerly seized.

It will be remembered that in our local press not long ago, appeared an article commending (wrongly, as it afterward appeared) one of our county school commissioners for advising the non-education of the colored people. Still later we have had communications in your esteemed paper, that would seem to come from the same source, as they seem to have the same ready flow of intemperate language.

Now the system of education in this country is not perfect, nothing of human origin is perfect, even the divine law 'given to Moses" was "weak through the flesh" says Paul. So we may not hope with our present intilectual limitations to reach educational perfection. But as it stands today the system of popular education, of which these States are the leading exponents, is the grandest institution of mere humanity that the world has so far seen, and with cheap literature, a free "penny press" and the "penny post," which with it are interdependent, forms the basis of all that is noblest and best in our civilization. It is the dawn of a light that one day will "lighten every man that cometh into the world" the preparation for and the harbinger of a still brighter and grander era, to which, in God's grace the human race is destined.

In matters of details in the school management, as in everything else, there is room for criticism. There ought to be criticism—sensible criticism to correct individual abuses: such a process is salutary and cleansing and braces up the vim and energy, even when strongly antagonistic, but the contempt and bitterness of the calumniator works its own condemnation as well as forestalls and prevents sane and healthy judgment.

It is sometimes remarked, for instance, that some of the studies are useless in after life, and also that the youngsters are "crammed" with too many different kinds of knowledge, and so on. There may be some truth in some of these things from some points of view, and in some cases, but when we take into consideration that we old school children have forgotten a good part of what they taught us, and that we had to relearn and unlearn considerable more, it doesn't make so much difference. There was one thing that we didn't lose—the power that is born of the discipline. The "savoir foire" the ability to do. What if they forget all their Latin and most of their German and mathematics? What if the geography is all twisted when the war is over, and the spelling reformers amend the dictionary, still these youngsters will have something left, and the rest, the residue and remainder, as the lawyers say, will enable them to keep up with things for they have been taught to think connectedly, broadly and manifoldly. What if some go to jail and some to the mad house, there are millions and millions that wont go there, and when we are out of the brunt of the fight these will step forward take up the standard and bear it on.
