Mrs. Powell Guilty.

"Guilty of murder in the second degree," was the verdict returned at 7.15 o'clock Saturday evening by the jury in the case of Mrs. Mary A. Powell, charged with killing Estelle Albin. Under the laws of Delaware, Mrs. Powell must serve a lifetime in prison, but it is the general impression that she will be pardoned before she has spent more than five years behind the bars.

Mrs. Powell was sentenced Monday. She will serve her sentence in the jail where she is now confined. The prisoner wept quietly when she heard the pronouncement, and, with her chin on her breast, fingered her gold-rimmed spectacles. She has been unstrung for the past few days, and a scene would have been probable had not the jury made known its decision in advance, and enabled her counsel to prepare her for what was to come.

Alfred M. Powell, husband of the prisoner, whose conduct with the dead girl was the motive for the killing, sat in a far corner of the court room. His face betrayed no emotion.

This ending of the trial was reached after a day of oratory on the part of counsel, which preceded the charge of the presiding judge to the jury. As the crisis approached Mrs. Powell became more and more nervous. There was scarcely a moment during the three hours' speech of her senior counsel, Henry Ridgely, that she was not weeping. Ward told the jury why he thought she should be hanged.

Mr. Ridgely's plea for his client was said to be the ablest speech that this remarkable lawyer ever made. Speaking of the relation between Estelle Albin and Mrs. Powell he said:

"Now, if one of those two had to die, which had the better right to live—the outraged wife, the simple, kindly, hardworking farm woman, or the husband's mistress, who insisted upon flaunting in the wife's face her own immorality, and that of the dog of a husband, despite the wife's repeated protests?"

Mr. Ward stuck close to the 170 wounds found upon Essie's body.

"The wounds tell the real story," he said. "Mrs. Powell, in her story, accounted for only three of the thirty-one bruises and two of the 139 cuts." With the pictures of the mutilated body, he traced the injuries, and called attention to the fact that Mrs. Powell had not been seriously hurt.

"I have nothing to say," was the only comment Mr. Ridgely would make. He said he had not decided whether or not to appeal the case.

"All I have to say is that the woman had very great provocation," said Attorney General Ward.

When Mrs. Powell and her guard emerged from the court house to go back to the cell which the prisoner had hoped to quit forever she looked much more than her 53 years. In the shadow of darkness her husband crept up to her and said:

"I am sorry, Molly."

QUICK ARREST.

J. A. Galledge of Verbena, Ala., was twice in the hospital for a severe case of piles causing 24 tumors. After doctors and all remedies failed, Bucklen's Arnica Salve quickly arrested further inflammation and cured him. It conquers aches and kills pain. 25c at R. J. Colston's, druggist.

Wants to Swap.

Wilmington ministers and Methodists in general are trying to locate the preacher of the Wilmington M. E. Conference who is advertising in the Christian Advocate of New York for someone to exchange with him in the New York, Newark, Philadelphia or Pennsylvania Conferences. The advertiser declares that he is serving one of the best charges in the Wilmington M. E Conference. So far as known this is the first time a minister in this section has ever advertised for a transfer. It was thought at first that Rev. C. S. Baker, who was sent to Asbury M. E. Church, and was received with considerable dissatisfaction, might be seeking a change, but Mr. Baker says that he is not.

A Grave Mistake.

At the opening of the May term of the Circuit Court for Queen Anne's county, Judge E. H. Brown, who delivered the charge to the grand jury, created quite a sensation. He stated that a reputable citizen of Centreville had been heard by him to remark that the County Commissioners of Queen Anne's county were not carrying out the law in regard to their salary, that while the act of 1898 allowed them only a per diem of $3 and mileage each time they met, they were regularly drawing $50 dollars monthly as salary. He enjoined the jury to investigate the matter thoroughly and stated that while he did not think a single Commissioner had intentionally drawn more money as salary than what he was legally entitled to, if such had been done, restitution should be made.

As "all roads lead to Rome," so, many roads lead to Preston, but only one road leads from Preston to Choptank, and this road is probably more traveled than any other in Caroline county. With a turnpike here, and a toll gate between the two towns, this road might be made not only self sustaining, but also to net a good income to the turnpike directors.

The American Public School.

Mr. Editor:

In addition to our letter of a few weeks ago on the above subject, I would be glad if you can find room for the following:

The broad road of popular education, free to whosoever will," is like the pure water, in its plentitude is disregarded, but its value is recognized when it is lacking. Observe the land where the school house is rare or unknown, or under ecclesiastical control—Russia, Spain. Notice where it is concerved for the benefit of the "ruling classes;" where the peasantry are boors and the drill-sergent makes a spitoon of the recruits face; where militaryism is rampant and the inhabitants are flocking out of the country as soon as they can raise enough money for a steerage passage.

Some people in this country do not seem to realize the benefits of their situation in many respects. I have heard native born Americans glory in the aristocratic institutions of Europe and legions of them adore its antiquated hierarchies. The plain, quiet little school house has no glamor of romance; here, only the "aristocracy of intelligence" is recognized. Here is the true "Republic of letters," the democracy of democracies. Other institutions have, more or less, a tendency to divide men into sects, parties and societies, but here is the club universal where the young mind comes in touch, direct and indirect, with the whole wide land. Here he sits and is disciplined as a respected junior citizen, with no preferences surrounding him and all possibilities before him. The public school is the realism of the aphorism: "From every one according to his ability; to every one according to his needs," and wealth, dignity, social standing with all the artificial trammels of human greatness cut no figure—at least not in the school yard.

Another point that is not sufficiently emphasized perhaps, is the wonderful power of the public school to assimilate all comers and weld them into a great nation. There were few people over here when Washington and the old patriots made a strike for "their rights as Englishmen." Only about as many in the whole country as there is now in one of the States. The descendants of these few consider themselves privileged characters in having sacred traditions of the battles of Lexington and Valley Forge.

From whence are all these vast multitudes that have poured upon these shores and flooded westward to fill the whole land? These are the chips and scraps of Europe and Asia. Scotch, English, Irish, French, German, Arab, Jew, Turk, Greek, "Crete and Arabian and the dwellers from Mesapotamia." Many of them have fought each other valliantly for milleniums, and hate each other heartily now. It is their sacred tradition and sometimes their religion. The function of the American public school is to dissolve all such factions and build them on the broad basis of our common humanity, and in this it has succeeded so well that in spite of tribal and local animosity, and sectarian bitterness, it has, out of the culls and tailings of the warring nations, produced one nation that for solidity as well as intelligence, cannot be excelled if it can be equled on the earth.

Still another advantage that the modern American public school has over other and older educational institutions for the young, is the almost entire absence of the brutal manner of handling the children that used to be thought a prime necessity in the inculcating of knowledge. During that period of enlightenment we indeed had nervous prostration and nausea, with pains in the back and limbs with great mental lassitude and all that sort of thing that you read about in quack medicine advertisements, but some of us survived, perhaps it did us some good and toughened us up for the many licks we have had since. But on these "piping days of peace" the lash is almost unknown. The young people have everything in reason done to make their school hours agreeable. You could not hire some of them to "play truant." I have known them to cry when they had to stay at home.

The men and women in whose care the young people are entrusted in the public schools are not only selected for ability, but are continually under the watchful eyes of experienced educators as well as subject to the zealous criticism of parents and patrons and there is no hedging or dodging the "fierce light that beats around" the public school house.

If one wishes to judge of modern methods in contrast with the ancient tyrany of the "school master" he ought to see the good-fellowship that exists in these days between the teacher and the taught. To view scenes such as I have seen in the school yard where the little ones cluster around their instructor like bees around their queen, or like the "hen gather ing her brood under her wing." Such a picture is more beautiful than a Murilla, and infinitely more sacred than a Raphael's Madonna. J. F. GELLETLY.

General Conference.

The General Conference of the M. E. Church is in session at Los Angelese. The delegates will during the daily sessions lasting throughout the month of May be called upon to solve many problems of importance to the growth and future welfare of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In the opinion of many high in the councils of Methodism the quadrennial session will prove the most important of any in the history of the Church. Among the many questions to be considered are the following: What can the Church do on the liquor question? What action can the Church take to solve the race question? Shall worldly pleasures, such as dancing, theatre-going, and cardplaying be condoned by the Church? With which combatant in the Orient are our sympathies? What can be done by the Church to prevent, in the good name of the country, the crime of lynching? Shall the itineraries of Methodist ministers be restored? How many Bishops shall be elected and how many be retired?

To save a life, Dr. T. G. Merritt, of No. Mehoopany, Pa., made a startling test resulting in a wonderful cure.
