STILL WAITING.

"Just wait!" said the boy, "for life is long.
Let me have a good time while I can;
Dull books and study to manhood belong—
Just wait till I am a man!"

"Oh, wait!" he said, when manhood came,
"Life is so joyous and gay;
Wait! there is time enough for fame—
'Rome was not built in a day.'"

"Just wait till the right time comes by and by—
Myself I shall never deceive—
Just wait! and you'll see me climbing high—
Success I'm sure to achieve!"

"I'm waiting," said he in middle age;
"I was never a man to shirk;
As soon as the right chance comes I'll engage
In hard and earnest work."

Though the "snap" he awaited never turned up,
And he sat in poverty's chair,
Still he quaffed away at his "just wait" cup
In his castles in the air.

Thus old age finds him waiting still,
And he sometimes thinks, with a sigh,
Of his wasted life—but he had his will,
And he's waiting yet—to die!
—Louise Grey Stitt, in Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Modern Juggernaut

By PERCY CHAMBERLAIN

(Copyright, 1904, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

IT HAPPENED so suddenly that the onlookers were paralyzed with the horror of it all—but not so suddenly that the brawny man who sprang forward to drag the child from the path of the great automobile, and failed, did not find time to seize a rock from the roadside and hurl it with unerring aim full at the head of the haughty chafeur.

So it happened that the cry of horror from the street was echoed in kind from the auto, and while tender hands picked up the maimed little body in the street other friendly hands held the lurching form of the young aristocrat in the auto from pitching out, and the big machine slowed up and stopped under the guidance of one of his friends.

Two athletic young fellows—evidently gentlemen of birth and position—leaped from the vehicle and hastened back with black brows, shouting for the police.

In the auto three young women in costly array swabbed the blood from the head of their injured comrade with priceless handkerchiefs of lace and still more priceless shawls, wraps and lingerie. One pair of dainty arms held the head of the wounded chaffeur, while four other dainty hands moved deftly to staunch the wound. For, sneer as you may, these dainty daughters of the rich are much as other women on occasion, and are resourceful, instinctive and unafraid.

As the two young athletes rushed back toward the spot from whence came the rock that had wounded their comrade, angry and swearing vengeance, they met with a sight which chilled their ardor. In front of them a brawny man, evidently a mechanic of the better sort, with wild eyes and foaming lips, striving with all his great strength to break away from the restraining arms of a full dozen earnest men and rush to meet them. Just beyond, a group of women gathered about a mangled, broken and moaning little object. They paused, however, but a moment. The more determined of the two rushed toward the struggling mechanic, shouting at the top of his voice:

"Officer, officer, this way; arrest that man, arrest that man."

"Let me at 'em, let me at 'em!" raved the struggling man. "It's the t'other one I'm after—the one who did it, an' did it a' purpose—I heered 'im say so—but if ye'll let me go I'll fix them in a second and then I'll get to him."

The men holding nodded, wisely reinforced their hold and looked more determined.

"Come Dan," said one, "it's awful bad, but ye mustn't do anythin' reckless. Ye'll only git into worse trouble—an' the little one 'll need all yer strength now."

The man paused and the tears started to his eyes.

"Is she hurt bad, boys?" he asked.

Just then an officer came along and, at the direction of the two young men from the auto, placed the mechanic under arrest. There were deep growls of disapproval among the onlookers, and the mechanic looked dazed. A well-dressed young man who had been watching the incident stepped forward and said to the officer, in a decisive voice:

"Arrest that man in the automobile. I saw the whole incident and I want to lodge a charge of murder against him."

"Do you know who that is?" demanded one of the automobilists.

"I don't care," was the reply.

"It is Stephen Hamilton, son of Harlow H. Hamilton."

The name was that of one of the great money kings of the day, and the young man who had interfered evidently realized its force. He paused a moment and looked grave. At this moment the man in the machine rallied and, half raising himself, said thickly:

"Found th' fellow who threw the stone?"

"Yes," replied one of his compan-

rest of us without suffering the penalty."

The man in the auto remarked: "He wants to find something out, Charley," he said. "In the interest of liberal education I demand to be taken to the police station and go through all these motions. And when it's all over I will take great pleasure to issue a sheepskin to this inquiring individual, conferring a new D. D. D. on him—doctor of d— doughheads."

And so this strange group landed at the station and Hamilton made his complaint against John Murray, who had thrown the rock at him. Also did Robert Dennis, the young business man, make his complaint against Hamilton for assault with intent to kill. All were released on bail and the party broke up. A few days later the lawyer for the Hamiltons telephoned Dennis to come and see him. Dennis referred him to his lawyer. Later Judge Pelham, the Hamilton lawyer, called at Dennis' office.

"Young man," he said, severely, "you are making a most serious mistake. This entire matter is not worth the work and annoyance it is going to give all concerned. Of course you know as well as I do that there is nothing in this charge against Hamilton. All an accident, sir, all an accident—and you know it. Maybe some damages involved, like doctor's fees, and that is all right and we will not fight them; but this criminal charge is preposterous—yes, preposterous, sir. It is persecution—little short of blackmail, sir, and we are not the kind of weaklings to sit down impotently under that sort of thing."

"I conceive it to be my duty, sir,' replied Dennis simply, "to bring this impudent fellow to justice. He ran over the child deliberately. I saw the expression in his eyes, and my own little boy was only six feet from the spot where he ran over the poor little girl. If it had been mine I would have killed him without fail. As it is, I propose to help Murray, who is more or less ignorant, to bring this insolent whelp to justice."

The face of the lawyer got cold, and he said: "Very well, sir; but you understand when you take up this fight that there will be blows to take as well as blows to give. You are in business. Is it wise to antagonize the Hamilton interests?"

"It may not be wise," responded Dennis, "but I will land him in the penitentiary if it costs me all I ever hoped to have."

It certainly was a fierce fight. The state's attorney hesitated a little to push the prosecution and Dennis hired the greatest criminal lawyer in the city to carry the case through. Of course there were postponements and delays, and the matter dragged fearfully. And when it became evident that Dennis proposed to stick, come what might, all of the tremendous power of the Hamilton millions were turned on him. His business venture was assailed from the most potent quarter, finance, and finally was wrecked. Then Dennis took a salaried job, and lost it, and then another and another. But the case against Hamilton steadily advanced, and finally it went to trial. It was a hard fought battle on both sides. The poor little crippled Murray girl was a most potent witness, but it was Dennis' clear evidence that won the case.

"I saw the automobile coming," he said, "and pulled my little boy onto the sidewalk, and shouted to the kids to look out. They all moved toward the sidewalk, gesticulating toward the machine. This man Hamilton glanced toward them and smiled in a most insolent manner. 'Watch the kids jump sidewise,' he said to his companions—I heard him—and he deliberately turned in toward the children. The children jumped, but the Murray girl was an instant too late and was caught by the hideous monster. And, sir, Hamilton did not seem to care as the little one was caught under the wheels. Yes, sir, and I saw him, and that's why I made the camplaint, and it is why I am following the case."

The jury never left their seats. Hamilton got five years in the penitentiary, and all the power of his family's millions could not secure a pardon.

Dry in Switzerland.

The past summer was exceptionally dry and warm in Switzerland, so that the hotels in the highest locations were overcrowded. In the Tyrol the same conditions prevailed. For the first time in many years some mountain sides were made available to climbers because of the melting of their ice coverings.

Not Strange.

"There was a strange man at the door just now, ma'am, and I don't think he could tell the truth if he tried," said the maid.

"Why, then, do you say he was a strange man, Bridget?" replied the woman, who was living with her second husband.—Yonkers Statesman.

BILIOUSNESS AND CONSTIPATION CURED BY THEDFORD'S BLACK-DRAUGHT
Because the liver is neglected people suffer with constipation, biliousness, headaches and fevers. Colds attack the lungs and contagious diseases take hold of the system. It is safe to say that if the liver were always kept in proper working order, illness would be almost unknown.
Thedford's Black-Draught is so successful in curing such sickness because it is without a rival as a liver regulator. This great family medicine is not a strong and drastic drug, but a mild and healthful laxative that cures constipation and may be taken by a nurse child without possible harm.
The healthful action on the liver cures biliousness. It has an invigorating effect on the kidneys. Because the liver and kidneys do not work regularly, the poisonous acids along with the waste from the bowels get back into the blood and virulent contagion results.
Timely treatment with Thedford's Black-Draught removes the dangers which lurk in constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and will positively forestall the inroads of Bright's disease, for which disease in advanced stages there is no cure. Ask your dealer for a 25c. package of Thedford's Black-Draught.
