Newspapers May Organize.

A dispatch from Georgetown to the Wilmington Morning News says:

"It has been suggested by some of the publishers of the county that an organization be effected, and it is likely that in the near future a letter requesting all of the editors of the county to assemble in Georgetown for the purpose of forming a Publishers Association and to establish uniform rates for advertising, etc., and work for the upbuilding of lower Delaware.

"The place for the holding of the meeting has been suggested for this town as it is centrally located, and the train facilities are much better than in some of the other towns of the county. Moreover, it is contended that there are three publications here while in other towns of the county there are only one and two. In the league it is desired that all take part who are engaged in the publication of weeklies in this county, and later, if plans materialize, it is the desire to form an organization composed of all the weeklies on the lower peninsula.

"Not only will the different rural weekly owners be thrown in contact with each other more so than they are now, but they can work together for the upbuilding of the county, as well as make a joint protest against such concerns from which they derive their supplies when they think they are being imposed upon."

G. Westerfield and Mrs. A. N. Ward served chocolate and coffee in the dining-room with cold sliced ham, chicken salad and Maryland biscuit, followed by ice cream, cakes, mints and salted nuts. As the newly wedded couples passed under the bells in the hallway they were given a surprise in the way of a miniature serenade, a very pleasing surprise to all. In selecting partners for the refreshment table a novel plan was used. The ladies were allowed to select pictures of gentlemen cut from fashion plates on the back of which a number was written, and the gentlemen were given pictures of ladies also numbered and each sought out a corresponding number. The arranging of these pairs was quite amusing, one gentleman and his wife drawing corresponding numbers. After an unusually pleasant evening the guests began to depart about 11 o'clock, many coming and going in automobiles on account of the rain.

He says: "I have studied the goosebone carefully, and you can mark positively that the winter will be mild. During the middle of January there will be severe cold weather for a week or two, and if blizzards are due they must appear then. February will not be unusually cold. The beginning of March will bring some rough weather, but this will be followed by an early spring. Farmers can feel assured that they can do plowing the latter part of March.

The volume of produce marketed including barrels of irish and sweet potatoes, crates of cabbage and berries, baskets of onions, etc., amounted to a total of nearly two million packages or more than nine thousand car loads.

Weather history shows that moderate temperature during the month of January is not unknown. There is history to the effect that in this locality the months of January in the years 1790 1793 and 1802; the month of February in 1828 and the month of December in 1828 were marked by average temperatures of from 38 to 44 degrees, and maximum records as high as 68 degrees. So "history repeats itself" in the matter of unusual weather as in respect of other affairs —Ex.

After many years of service with the P. B. & W. and Delaware railroads Isaac N. Ambition.

When he made just three plunks a week
He thought if he made five
He'd surely be the happiest
Young business man alive.
He finally got five a week,
But wasn't happy then;
He never would be satified
Until he pulled down ten.
When he got ten a week he thought
His compensation mean,
He knew he'd reach his heart's desire
If he could get fifteen.
He got his fifteen, then he knew
A person could not thrive
In this expensive day and age
On less than twenty-five.
He finally got twenty-five,
The sum he'd thought so nifty;
But he couldn't be content
And live on less than fifty.
He got his fifty one fine day,
And then he found out that
He never could be happy quite
Without one hundred flat.
He made some wise deals after that
And gathered in a million,
But was he happy? No, indeed,
He had to have a billion.
And it is safe to say that if
He really got his billion
Old age would find him fighting to Accumulate a trillion.—Ex.

Mildest in 24 Years

From indications recorded at the Baltimore office of the United States Weather Bureau, there is no prospect of a break in the mild winter. The freezing line still remains far to the north, with a slight change toward the south during the early mornings.

From a report of the records of temperature for the first 17 days in this month, the weather was the warmest in 24 years, and since that time the thermometer has registered above normal. The freezing line at present is about North Dakota.

The mean temperature for the month so far has been 41.99°

The oldest residents throughout the State say that thus far the present winter has been the mildest they can remember. G. W. Covington of Still Pond, Md., writes the Baltimore Sun as follows:

"By referring to The Sun of January 2, 1878, you will find an article giving a record of a remarkably mild winter up to that date, with some comparative dates inclusive."

The article referred to by Mr. Covington shows that December, 1878, was the mildest for 30 years. The mean temperature for December, 1848, was 45 and the mean temperature for December, 1878, 40.73. The average mean for all previous Decembers from 1821 to 1878 was about 35. The maximum for December, 1878, was 61 and the minimum 25. Not only December the article says, but the entire period from October 1 was remarkable for fine weather.

The mild weather is having serious effect on the crops and fruit, and the farmers fear that if it continues, vegetation will be so far advanced that a cold snap will be disastrous to it. The wheat is far ahead and it is said would be better off if covered with snow at this season. Reports have been heard of fruit trees budding.

Experimental Farms.

The scheme of establishing a string of model farms, which has been inaugurated by several of the big railroad systems, will ultimately accomplish big results in way of inspiring and promoting better farming methods. These farms are intended not only to try out new theories in fruit growing, field culture or some other branck of farming, but to demonstrate the practicability and efficacy of intensive farming. That these experiment farms will exert an inspirational influence is indicated by some of the local reports from sections where the first of the railroad farms have been for some time in operation. These reports are to the effect that in instances enterprising farmers have entered into competition with the railroad farms, and in several cases, it is said, have achieved more successful results. In all sections of the United States the farming industries are in something of a transitional situation. We have reached a period when we are realizing the importance of intensive methods. If the potential yield of an acre is fifty bushels of wheat or one hundred bushels of corn, the farmer who is obtaining an average yield of only twenty bushels of wheat or fifty bushels of corn should be ask ing himself what is the matter with his farming.

Encouragement For Farmers.

The oldest human industry is farming. It is also the greatest. Last year was the record year for agriculture in the United States, the value of farm products reaching the tremendous total of $9,534,000,000. Secretary Wilson whose annual report to President Taft is a sort of valedictory after sixteen years of service as the head of the Agricultural Department makes a striking comparsion of the enormous figures for 1912 with $4,000,000,000 the value of farm production when he entered office sixteen years ago.

"Sixteen years ago." says Secretary Wilson, "the farmer was a joke of the caricaturist; now he is like the stone that was rejected by the builder and has become the headstone of the corner. The tillers of the soil were burdened with debts, but prosperity followed and grew with unexpected speed. Beginnings have been made in a production per acre increasing faster than the natural increase of population. There has been an uplift of agriculture and of country life." Farmers should feel grateful for their prosperity and not feel jealous of any one else's success.

Perhaps the most significant development in the agricultural field has been the movement toward intensive cultivation which has characterized the twentieth century, in contrast with agricultural expansion which marked the farming industry in the nineteenth century. Farms are increasing in number and decreasing in size. The percentage of waste land upon farms is decreasing, and under the impetus of a more scientific knowledge of the soil and its needs, at least a beginning has been made in increasing the yield per acre. With a population growing by leaps and bounds, and a constant drift to cities, a more intensive cultivation of the soil is the only thing that will save us from becoming a nation that has to import its staple foodstuffs.
