THOSE RHEUMATIC TWINGES

Much of the rheumatic pain that comes in damp, changing weather is the work of uric acid crystals.

Needles couldn't cut, tear or hurt any worse when the affected muscle joint is used.

If such attacks are marked with headache, backache, dizziness and disturbances of the urine, it's time to help the weakened kidneys.

Doan's Kidney Pills quickly help sick kidneys.

A New York Case

D. J. Donovan, Larchmont, N. Y., says: "My right leg was so swollen it was twenty-four inches around. My back felt as if it were being prodded with a hot iron. I had run down from 210 pounds to 150. I was steadily growing worse, and had given up hope. I improved rapidly, however, under the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. They cured me entirely and I have since gained 40 pounds."

TESTIMONY NOT OF MOMENT

Daniel Frohman, as an "Expert Witness," Put Forth Little to Elucidate Case.

Daniel Frohman, who is always called as an expert witness when there are questions of the stage to be decided, was one of those who gave testimony in William Harcourt's suit to obtain royalties from George Broadhurst for having helped him to place his play, "The Man From Home."

"What," they asked Mr. Frohman, "is a 'Broadway production?'"

"A production that is put on in first-class style at a Broadway theater," answered the witness after deep thought.

But the answer was stricken from the record.

"Does it benefit an actor to be seen in a Broadway production?" asked the actor's lawyer.

Mr. Frohman looked suspiciously at the judge and then answered: "If he appears to his benefit it does."

"Move to strike it out" came from the opposite side.

"Granted," in the court's monotone.

Then the expert was allowed to go.

Hopeless Case.

Miss Irene Gillicuddy, of Millville, Miss., writes: "I have a gentleman friend who has been keeping company with me all this year, but who has never indicated or intimated that he wishes to be considered other than a friend of mine. I am nineteen years old, with ruby lips, rose-pink cheeks, golden hair, azure eyes and a gentle disposition. Do you think I should hang up some mistletoe and accidentally stand beneath it while he is around, just to encourage him?"

"Irene, if a young man needs the encouragement of mistletoe under the circumstances, there is no hope for him."

Decline and Fall of the Kiss.

Real kisses soon become monotonous, according to Mrs. Minnie Slentz, who, in her divorce testimony, said: "Some couples may kiss each other right up until they are 60, in an attempt to fool themselves into thinking that their kisses have the genuine heart glow of the first month of marriage, but it is all bosh. Real kissing becomes monotonous during the second year, intermittent from the fourth to the sixth, and stops entirely before the eighth year of married life."—Steubenville Dispatch to Philadelphia Inquirer.

Sick-Room Light.

If there are electric lights in the sick room they will generally be found too brilliant, hurting the eyes of the patient, and not every sick room has the electric lights that can be turned up or down. Make a little green silk bag and fasten it over the incandescent bulb and it will give a good but subdued and harmless light.

Plenty of Fuel.

"Coal's out," announced the office boy.

"Um."

"Shall I try to scare up some more?"

"No," said the rural editor. "Spring poems will be coming in soon."

Extremes.

"I ran out with my new machine."

"What happened?"

"I got run in."

How To Become An Ideal Wife

Who is the Ideal Wife and where does she dwell?

She's that "Not Impossible She" long sought in song and story, of course—and she dwells safe in the heart of her husband.

No other niche in life fits or could comfortably hold such a rara avis as the Ideal Wife.

Since her price is above rubies, one naturally does not expect to find her enshrined in any temple made with hands. True, she may dwell in a palace, but her real home is in the heart created for her to fill—that of the man whose ideal is realized in the qualities that go to make her what she is.

What, says one, is an ideal wife? How would a man know if he came across that extraordinary creature? And the question opens up avenues for a hundred definitions of ideal wife.

For as there are many men of many minds, so there are quite as many men with quite as many hearts. And quite as varied ideas of what ideal qualities will be met and molded in the creature who shall mean all perfection to them.

Must Have Many Qualities.

The ideal wife is not a type; she is an individual. One woman may embody all the qualities of an ideal wife to one man, and be quite as much of a mismate to another. It depends altogether on such a number of things—sympathy with a man's ideals, of his motives, appreciation of his big and good points and an infinite charity for those in which he fails—and all these go to make up that perfect understanding in which two souls are held as one.

A man needs a wife who can work with him and who can play with him. Who can point him to the "dream," even in the business of everyday living; who can hold his faith up to the high ideal of the best and the truest and put her shoulder gallantly to the wheel and help him get to it.

An ideal wife should be more than a figurehead to a man's house, though one hears this expression so often that So-and-So makes an admirable "head" for the house of her rich husband.

It always reminds me of the old head of a woman who used to be put on most of the vessels at sea. There are many wives that are "heads of the house" that occupy positions as far as real human responsibility goes not unlike these wooden heads on those old-time ships.

Can't Be a Figurehead.

A wife can't be a figurehead on the matrimonial ship. If the voyage is to be a safe, happy and a prosperous one the captain sees to it that she has real duties and responsibilities to take upon her. A first mate is an excellent position for such a one. And she seldom falls down when she assumes the duties that go with this position.

The pioneer's wife was the ideal wife for the man who had to go forth to face all the danger of frontier life. Those pioneer women have come down to us in history, and we see first that they possessed a great gift of adaptability.

For not all of them were hardly daughters of the soil, inured to face the dangers that went with forest hewers at that time. Many were delicately reared women, who had never put their hands to anything more laborious than fine needlework and exquisite tapestry. Yet those accomplishments were put aside when they faced new dangers and real work. They fell to it with a vengeance and adapted themselves to breech-loading shotgun practice as readily as in the old days they played the light games of the leisure classes in their far-off homes across the sea.

Played Many Roles.

Again these women, as time went on, proved themselves quite as adaptable when conditions again changed. We have only to retrace the history of America to read between the lines annals of lives of women that match those of the men of that time in splendid daring and superb courage. When times grew better and more prosperous we see them again drifting into the Old World eddy, the Colonial finery and vanity sitting gracefully upon them. The other qualities for the time were quiescent. As ideal wives they played many roles and did each part equally well.

Is this not, then, the most dominant quality in the ideal wife—her adaptability? An actress' skill is in adjusting her make-up to every role she plays and in keeping the performance up to a high pitch of interest and always carrying the hearts of those in the house with her.

When her husband is a clerk with a small salary she is the one who accepts Harlem with the spirit of the little queen who played at housekeeping up on the heights and makes of it quite as good a game as the people down town were doing.

She is the same woman who, when the lean days are passed, is prepared to move with her husband, no matter how much finer and fairer his friends have grown. For she has moved with him. They are still keeping step, fine comrades and ideal mates.

Ready for Anything.

If great good fortune places them high in political position she is ready to assume her share of the new prosperity and to carry it off with grace and distinction. Just as if the reverse had come and they had lost all, she'd be ready to pin on her hat and swing out independent of him to make a living for them both, maybe, until he should get back on his feet.

Whatever comes, she is ready for it, for hers is the "anticipatory glance" that sees the shadow that betokens the coming of events before any one else does. And, being forewarned, she is forearmed, and ready to meet whatever comes to the house.

The ideal wife doesn't boast that she is all things to all men, but she must be just this much of a composite creature to her husband.

She is the home woman to him and the enchantress; the business woman and the holiday maker; she is the confidante and the chum and all these things besides being the wife of his bosom, and incidentally very much of a mother in her maternal feeling toward him.

Pretty? some one asks, for the papers give pages on how to keep a husband's love, and it is all based on a physical attraction of good looks.

Certainly, she must be good to look at, but she is not to cultivate her outer woman to the neglect of the inner one. Beauty has its secret spring in happiness, you know. All the cold creams and lotions, bleaches and face paints in the world fail to compare with the magic glow that happiness can paint into a woman's cheek, or with which it may illumine her eye.

Inspires Her Husband.

She is more than a "showgirl," and she is wise when she refuses to let her husband's interest and his pride in her rest on a basis as material as this one. She is his mental stimulus, his inspiration and his always sympathetic listener. If he falls, there's one person whose understanding he is sure of, and that is his wife's. If he succeeds her applause sounds sweetest in his ears. Whatever comes, she is ready to share it with him. For she is the ideal woman and the ideal wife whose price is above rubies to her husband, because she is worth infinitely more to him from a spiritual standpoint than all the pigeon blood rubies in the world pawned would bring.

Trouble Brings Opportunity.

The ideal wife's great opportunity comes when a man's lips are "pressed to the wormwood cup"—whatever it is. This comes to most men soon or late, and the wife is the only one who can help him to put it aside—to see the final good for which he is working in the midst of all the torment pressing upon him.

Darby and Joan growing old together are considered by some to be the ideal couple. Maybe. History is full of women who have won their immortality by their faithfulness to the marriage vows. But it seems to me that we have a case nearer home that is too beautiful to omit.

There is the Strauses who went down to death together. It is a story so often told that it does not need repetition here. But the wife who quietly stayed by her husband's side, because she felt that with him was to be preferred to life without him, must have realized all to that husband that any ideal wife can hope to be.

Such a one takes the fortunes of her husband whatever they be. The two are one, and death shall not divide them. Of course this is old fashioned, but is not the very term "ideal wife" old fashioned? It belongs to another generation. Another time when other ideals swayed the marriage game.

Love the Chief Factor.

But the times may have changed without changing a great part of people. And however advanced a man may be in other matters, every man cherishes a dream that one of these days he is going to meet the ideal woman and marry her. He knows what she will be like, and though he may look with a certain large-minded indulgence on her new-fashioned foibles, he'll seek deeper for the foundation of her real character and to learn what her real feeling about love is.

There never was an ideal wife who didn't have very real and deep feeling on this point. She may be frivolous to the limit on the subject of clothes; she may adore fashion and be as light-hearted and irresponsible as a kitten, and still have some very rare and fine feelings about the biggest and most important issue of all—love; and, having this, the man may find her, and most often does, the ideal wife.

For the vanity and the foolishness pass away; they were but parts of her joyous youth, leaving the best part of what it was to grow bigger and better and to make a corner stone of the home of which she will be the guiding spirit.—Rita Reese, in the New York Press.

SOUGHT TO ROB PRINCESS

Desperado's Bold Attempt Frustrated By Courage and Presence of Mind of Woman.

An ex-sergeant of cavalry, named Callerani, posing as a police officer, went to the palace of Princess Hercolani at Bologna and, having obtained an interview, presented her with a written demand for $500, purporting to be signed by a black hand society.

The man demanded that she should also hand over her valuable jewelry. As the princess absolutely refused to accede to the request, Callerani fired at her twice with a revolver. Luckily the aim was bad and the princess escaped injury.

The princess struck him a powerful blow on the chest, and managed to ring an electric bell for help. Finding that the game was up, the man rushed into an adjoining room, but this afforded him no means of escape, and the princess kept him at bay until the arrival of the police.

Callerani expended all his spare cartridges in a fruitless attempt to smash the lock of the door, which offered a means of escape.

When arrested Callerani said that he was out of work and starving.

After-Dinner Oratory.

After-dinner oratory, which a head waiter has been criticising, is generally supposed to be at its best in the United States. Undoubtedly the Americans are able to stand more of it than we can, for the speeches following their banquets are commonly prolonged until long past mignight. Their toast lists, too, are different from ours—"The Press—right or wrong; when right to be kept right; when wrong to be set right," or "Truth and trade; those whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder." James Russell Lowell, one of the most successful of its exponents, once enumerated what he called "the ingredients of after-dinner oratory." "They are," he said, "the joke, the quotation and the platitude; and the successful platitude, in my judgment, requires a very high order of genius."—London Chronicle.

"You don't say so. What's the matter with him?"

"I think when I saw him taking a down grade just now in his auto that he was mixed up about the brake."

HOUSE FOR "DOWN AND OUTS"

Ground for a $50,000 Building Is Broken in Philadelphia for Unfortunates.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Ground was broken here for a building to be erected for the "inasmuch mission," which was started by four converted "down and outs" several years ago in a section of the city known as "Hell's Half Acre." The building will be erected on the site where they started to care for their fellow outcasts in two small houses on one of the most notorious streets in the city. Bishop Rhinelander made the consecration prayer.

The new building, made possible by a gift of $50,000, is to be a four-story structure of brick and concrete. A chapel seating 350 persons will take up part of the ground floor. Baths, a lounging room and a lunchroom will be provided. The dormitory will occupy the fourth floor, where will be found lockers, baths and cots to accommodate 150 men. Meals will be provided at cost.

French Discover New Fad.

Paris.—Foot-reading as an alternative to palmistry is now the fashionable fad in Paris. Among the most ardent adepts of the alleged science is the Countesse Mellusine de la Rochefoucauld, a descendant of the great writer. She declares many distinguished men of letters are adherents of the cult of the feet.

One of the melancholy duties of Monday is counting the victims of Sunday's "joy rides," so called.

MR. DOLBY IMPOSED ON

WHY HE BROKE A SELFISH RESOLUTION.

Had Resolved to Play Part of Hog on a Crowded Street Car, Until Woman With Borrowed Baby Appeared.

Dolby likes babies. That is why he gave his seat to the good-looking young woman in the triangular brown hat. She carried a baby. If she had not been so incumbered she would have been condemned to strap hanging, so far as Dolby was concerned, for he vowed at the beginning of the trip that he was going to play the hog.

"I'm dead tired," he said to Mr. Bowler. "Thank heaven, I've found a seat. I am going to stick to it, too. Nothing short of an accident or a woman with a baby can rout me out till I get home.'

Bowler said "Humph," as did several other passengers who overheard Dolby's selfish resolution. The young woman in the brown hat stood within hearing distance as Dolby thus declared himself, but she did not say "Humph." She merely thought it. Presently she edged down the car until she stood directly in front of Dolby. About that time the baby began to show off. He kicked at Dolby's hat, first with the left foot and then with the right, and then with both feet simultaneously, and said, "Oo-oo-oo," very plaintively.

Dolby looked up and met the baby's eye. The youngster's gaze embarrassed his somewhat, so he allowed his eyes to travel a litle higher. That time he encountered an appealing glance from the young woman. Dolby became still more embarrassed; he sat still a few seconds longer.

"Madam," he said, "will you have this seat?"

"Thank you," sighed the young woman. "You are very kind."

It really was not worth while to tell Dolby that. He already had an exaggerated notion of his own magnanimity, so, to even things up, he retired to the back platform and picked a quarrel with the conductor. When he got tired of that he stepped inside the car again. Directly in front of him, but under different guardianship, sat the baby that had so ruthlessly assaulted the rim of his hat a few minutes before.

"Oo-oo-oo," coed the baby.

"Hello," said Dolby. "Aren't you the kid that took liberties with my headgear a little while ago? How did you get down to this end of the car?"

The baby's reply was not exactly intelligible, so his mother supplemented it with a more lucid explanation.

"He belongs here," she said. "The lady sent him back. She just borrowed him for a few minutes."

With one quick glance Dolby retreated to the platform, and there he stayed.

World's Largest Index.

On Beacon Hill, in Boston, under the golden dome of the statehouse, is one of the largest indexes in the world. In fact, the Russian public index is the only one known to be larger. More than 9,000,000 names, births, marriages and deaths in Massachusetts from 1943 make a complete record, showing not only where people were born and where they died, but also statistics which are vital in making up calculations. Before this time, says the National Magazine, the records were kept in the different towns, but now they are all concentrated in the statehouse in Boston. In a relatively small space all these records are preserved, and as births, marriages and deaths come in, different forms of cards are used, and a great variety of names, Grecian, Assyrian, Italian and others now mingle with good old New England names that have been on the records since the landing of the Mayflower.

Freezing an Easy Death.

Freezing to death, writes a medical authority, is preceded by a drowsiness which makes the end painless—the body actually feels warm and goes comfortably to sleep. Experiments have been made with animals to show just how freezing to death proceeds.

In one of these experiments, in which the animal was placed in a temperature of 125 to 150 degrees below zero, the breathing and heart beats at first were quickened, the organic heat of the body actually rising above normal.

This rising showed a sudden and an intense effort on the part of functions to preserve the body's temperature. Then the violent heart action gave out suddenly and death came when the temperature of the body dropped to 71 degrees.

High Price for Straightness.

One of the most difficult problems in practical mechanics is to make a straight edge. How difficult it is may be judged from an incident that occurred in the shop of a celebrated astronomical instrument maker.

A patron asked what would be the price of "a perfect straight edge of glass 36 inches long."

"It cannot be made perfect," said the instrument maker; "but it could probably be made with a limit of error amounting to only a fraction of a wave length of light."

"How much would that cost?"

"About forty thousand dollars."

It turned out that the customer wanted the straight edge for a scraper and that an error of one sixty-fourth of an inch would not bother him.

Treatment for Bees.

A young man on a local newspaper was recently given charge of the "Helps for Suburbanites" column in the absence of the regular editor. The young gentlemtn managed to wade through the majority of the perplexing questions in his day's mail until at last he came to a stickler. Rushing into the news room he stopped beside the city editor's desk and asked: "Mr. ——, can you tell me how to treat sick bees?"

"With respect," retorted the city editor as he resumed his perusal of the rival sheet.—Boston Traveler.

REFUSE TO MEET STRANGERS

Peculiar Method of Trading Indulged in by New Guinea Tribe Who Keep to Themselves.

No European has ever been able to meet in their own dwelling-place the Kukuhuhus, a shy, yet ferocious tribe of New Guinea. Other tribes of the country, while they have a great fear of the Kukuhuhus, manage to do a bartering trade with them. They bring salt, eathenware, dried fish, etc., and deposit them in a certain indicated place. They then retire for a few hours, being notified to do so by a curious cry from the distance. The mountain dwellers then descend to view the goods offered for sale. If they want them they put down other goods, such as skins, feathers, and other jungle produce, next to those article wanted by them. Then they retire in turn, and when the way seems clear the coast dwellers approach again. If the latter are satisfied with what is offered in exchange, they take the goods put down by the mountain people and go away; if not satisfied they retire again as before with empty hands.

ECZEMA SPREAD OVER BODY

R. F. D. No. 1, Lewisburg, Ky.—"Fifteen years ago I was badly affected with eczema upon my scalp first, then it spread all over my body and continued to grow worse for four years. It began with a dry rash. After forming thick scales or scabs the irritation forced me to scratch the scabs off and the hair would come out with them. Upon my face and body the sores would get inflamed and they disfigured my face. It was worse where my clothes irritated them. The eruption was a yellowish watery kind, sometimes bloody. In warm weather it was so bad I was not able to work on account of the raw irritating sores on my head and body.

"After trying various medicines without relief I tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment. After using four cakes of Cuticura Soap and four boxes of Cuticura Ointment and one bottle of the Resolvent I was entirely sound and well and have been for eleven years." (Signed) W. H. Williams, Mar. 19, 1912.
